Conclusion: Use Your Actions	336

Introduction

I represent a society that lives on another planet. You would refer to us as extraterrestrials. Your scientists are now beginning to discover enfolded within your reality that there are many more than just one dimension of experience. We occupy another dimensional plane altogether. But if, for a frame of reference you were to overlap your reality and our universal reality we would be located, and again perhaps this is somewhat arbitrary, but for the purposes of convention, approximately 500 of your light-years in the direction of the Orion constellation.

Our planet is a society much as your own, with many differences as well. We have, in our society, embodied unconditional love, peace, acceptance, and a willingness to function as a cooperative whole, but not in any way shape or form at the cost of individuality. All individuals still maintain that sense of individuality. But we understand what is very possible is that there is and can be unity in diversity.

We relish the diversity. We understand that all the truths that exist within our society are true, even if they would seem to “be at odds” with each other. Individuals understand as a foundation that all truths are true to the people that believe that they are true. Though we may not choose a particular truth, we do not forsake it, and this allows for a style of cooperation.

We interact with your society not because we have something to offer you that you don't already have, nor because we feel that we have something that is better than what you are already doing. No. We simply wish to share what has worked for us and what you also already contain. We do so only to provide you an option but not with an insistence in any way that you need change anything that you are doing because it is we who are saying it.

Extraterrestrial means we live on another planet, but what it does not mean is that in any way, shape, or form that we are better than you. No. Though we are in our consciousness and as a society perhaps more expanded than your own, we do not extrapolate that to mean better in any way. We understand that all expressions within creation are equally valid. We honor you and you honor us by your acceptance to interact with us and allow us again to reflect back to you what you already know.

You Contain it All

You can only perceive something at all to begin with if you first contain it. Should you hear any ideas from us, or from anyone for that matter, that you find most pleasing, they only ring true with you and they only make sense to you because you already contain them. We are not truly giving you anything you don't already have. We function as a mirror or a reflection of the portion within you that many of you say you prefer. You cannot experience the concept of someone being confident or kind if you did not understand confident and kind.

You Do Not Have to Believe Us

It is, again, our honor to be ambassadors in this way from our civilization. One of the reasons that we are not meeting face-to-face at this time is that there are many differences.

We do not insist in any way that you believe who we say we are. That is not important. If you wish to, go right ahead. If you do not, then allow the information that we share to simply stand on its own. That is really all that is important: the information, the exchange, and the sharing. We do not insist that you use it. We do not insist that you believe that we are who we say we are. We cannot prove it empirically at this point.

You can only prove what we are saying. If you put into action what we are saying, I guarantee 100% that you will get the results in your life. But it's up to you and it always will from our perspective be up to you.

All That Is and God

You have in your society a concept that many of you call in your language "God." We prefer to utilize the terminology, as do some others on your planet, of "all that is." That terminology is all-inclusive and leaves nothing out. From our perspective, it is a precise definitional nomenclature. Everything in creation is part by definition of "all that is." "All that is" is the white light of infinite creation itself and though it has many extensions into what you call your physical universe, "all that is" also exists within what you would call "non-physicality." It is both.

You Are a Prism

You are sparks of that white light of "all that is." You as physical beings are literally prisms that break down that light in particular individual ways. As an analogy, you can say that this prism is three-sided and contains beliefs, emotions, and thoughts. When you believe something, you generate particular corresponding emotions, and then particular thoughts.

Based upon that prism, you then act. It is the actions in this physical reality, that midwife your thoughts into physical reality. There are other realities that are not physical where this is not the case. Depending upon your beliefs, you generate certain emotions, thoughts, and actions, and the actions speak the loudest, as you say.

You Create Your Own Reality

You do indeed create your own reality. We do not mean that you have some minute control over your destiny--we mean that you create it entirely, 100% through that prism. However, if you want to believe that you do have limited control, then that will be true for you and you will experience that. It is up to you, however, to believe that you create your own reality or not.

In order to create your reality, you can use any one side of that prism to trace back to the fundamental belief that are being expressed in your life. We provide this as a perspective to empower you, if you choose to act as though you create your own reality.

Your actions create your life in a physical universe. If you act like you don't create your own reality, you create in those actions the evidence, the logic, that will reinforce the fact that you do not. If, fundamentally, you don't believe that you create your own reality, you will create that effect. All truths are true and therefore you will create the effect of seeming not to create your own reality.

It is truly up to you to decide that. Perhaps it is appealing to you to believe that you do create your own reality for then you can change it if you don't like the way it is. This is power.

How to Change Your Reality

You can change it very simply. Anytime something happens which you do not prefer, there are many treasures buried within a circumstance that results in you reacting in a negative way. Any emotion that you have in any given situation is always a result of a belief. You can use this to your advantage by understanding it. When you have a particular emotion, ask yourself, particularly if it is something negative you do not wish to perpetuate, "What must I believe in this situation to feel this way?" The first step to changing your beliefs is acknowledging the beliefs you already believe and express.

Become Conscious of Your Beliefs

You create your reality, but you do so in general in two ways: consciously and unconsciously. When you do so consciously, you choose certain beliefs deliberately. Also, you do this unconsciously and often this means buying very strongly into things that were spoon-fed to you as you were brought up, simply because you did not realize there was any other choice. Once you chose a particular belief, you then generate the corresponding emotions, thoughts, and actions.

All beliefs contain within them a self-sustaining self-perpetuating system of logic and system of evidence. Therefore, you always get what you believe and believing truly is seeing. What you see is the result of your beliefs, not the other way around.

Choose New Beliefs

When you are willing to decide that you create your own reality, you can weed out the beliefs which no longer serve you and that perhaps you bought into unconsciously. The unconscious beliefs that you have bought into that are negative and limiting will always have some effect on your emotions, thoughts, and actions. This results in creating realities that may seem overwhelmingly negative.

Reality Has No Built-In Meaning

All situations from our perspective and experience are a fundamentally blank set of props with no built-in meaning. You supply the meaning and the meaning that you supply determines the effect you get out. So, it's literally up to you.

You Can Choose a Positive Meaning

If a particular situation comes along that on the surface you do not prefer, the reason you do not prefer it is because you are assigning it a particular meaning and getting the negative effect back from it. It is always in your hands to understand this.

It is always in your hands as a middle step to neutralize any symbol that is present in your life. "This is neutral. It is overwhelmingly obvious what seems negative about it. But if I truly create my own reality, I understand that I have created this and everything I create can be a positive service to me. Now that I am becoming a conscious creator, I can also look at the symbol from the perspective of "how does this serve me."

You can then turn it all around and use any seemingly negative situation in a positive way. The mere response that you have to a seemingly negative situation is an emotion. Emotions are a window to your beliefs. You can always trace back why you initially labeled it as negative to begin with.

Your Purpose in Life

"What is my purpose in life" is a common question that we encounter. Your purpose is a particular emotional vibrational state that you call excitement. In any particular situation, excitement is the vibratory energy that tells you what about it is most you.

Integrity

When we say excitement, we mean excitement with integrity. Integrity is the recognition that "all that is" is "all that is," and you are part of "all that is." Therefore, everything is integrated. There is an entire integration of all

Aliens Aren't Green reality, so therefore if you truly understand this, you treat things with that respect, understanding that you are connected to it.

One of the ways that integrity translates is that you have as much power as you need in your life to create anything that you wish without harming yourself or anyone else. That, in a nutshell, is integrity.

When we say that you can follow your excitement, it may sound hedonistic, but if you factor in integrity, no one is ever harmed. Anything that you do, anything that you generate from your excitement, by virtue of the fact that you are honoring and validating that excitement within you, allows you to be of service to yourself and thereby, by extension, service to everyone else.

When you consider what excites you, society may heap upon you, "Well everyone knows you can't do that for a living." If you can get in touch with what truly excites you without accepting the invalidation of society, then you can follow and act on your excitement.

That process of determining what it is that truly moves you, that gives you passion, that excites you, is the process of self-definition. It is also positive and self-validating. When you do this, you are saying that you will not settle for anything less than who you chose to be in this life. "Make no bones about it," as you say. You have chosen to be here.

Eternal Existence

In the Bible, it says you are made in the image and likeness of God, but do you really all know what that truly means? "All that is," is multidimensional, infinite, and eternal. Therefore, so are you. You also are made in that likeness, and you are multidimensional, infinite, and eternal. You have no beginning and you have no end.

In your natural state, as a soul, there is no time. Time is a creation within this particular reality. When you do choose to participate in this reality, you focus your overall consciousness in a very fine way in order to explore certain ideas.

You have existed before this life and will exist after this life. As a matter of fact, “before, during, and after” are simply definitions and creations within a physical reality. We understand that, while this particular reality feels like it exists, empirically it doesn’t, and you created it. You experience the passage of time. However, when you “die,” or from our perspective “transform,” you still exist. Even as your scientists say, “Energy can neither be created nor destroyed.” You are an eternal being and the same applies to you.

Your Purpose

Although you have led many lives, the purpose of a particular life is to lead that life to the fullest. Although you have had many re-incarnational selves, you will only be this you one time.

Even if you don’t remember choosing this you, you have the opportunity when choosing to be this you to be this you most fully and, in extension, be of service to the planet and yourself. Following your excitement with integrity will dovetail you with your purpose.

Excitement is the Path and Destination

When we discuss excitement, we do so from two perspectives. One perspective is the overall thing that excites you the most, but also because you create the illusion of time, you only ever exist right now. If you think about it, when was it ever not right now? When was it ever not right here and right now? No matter where and when you are, it is always here and now. You can always transform yourself right here, right now. You are eternal.

Do What Excites You Right Now

The second perspective of excitement is what excites you the most in any given moment. Focus on what is available. If you focus on things that you cannot act upon and that are not available in any moment you will find yourself frustrated. You will also distract your vision from what is right in front of your face. If you reground yourself to the here-and-now moment, and see what is available, "What can I do something about," there will be many choices that are obviously available. Act upon those.

From the options available in any given moment choose the one that excites you the most with integrity. If you deny what excites, you generate a momentum that creates a life that you do not prefer.

Remember, you cannot get rid of the things you do not prefer, because you are within "all that is," and there is simply nowhere to put them. However, you can transform them or re-emphasize what it is you wish to experience by following your excitement.

When you do that, you will generate new results which generally will wind up replacing the old unpreferred results and also transforming them. It's not about running from them but walking to the things that you say are representative of who you are. This approach will help you as individuals find purpose and fulfillment.

Unconditional Love

When you allow yourself to have fulfillment and purpose, you become more tolerant of yourself and it deepens and enriches your unconditional self-love. Again, to quote your Bible or paraphrase it, when it says love others as yourself, this presupposes that you do love yourself. The white light of “all that is,” the energy imbuing the white light of “all that is” is unconditional love itself. The word unconditional means no conditions. It means you cannot lose the love of “all that is” for it is unconditional.

When individuals in your society speak about a judgmental god, that is not unconditional. That is quite conditional. From our perspective that is creating God in the image of man, not the other way around.

If you ponder the idea of unconditional love you can see that it would not be judgement because judgement implies conditions and unequal weights. All things in reality are equal and have the right and reason to exist.

This does not mean in any way that you need condone a reality that you find most negative. However, matching that negativity does not provide any alternatives. Matching that negativity actually reflects back to the individuals being negative, that “What you are doing works and I will prove it to you. I will do it back.”

Maintaining your unconditional love shows individuals who are choosing to be negative that there is another alternative and “Here I am the living example.” It also in general leaves them scratching their heads. You can only, when you find that something works for you, share it with other people most effectively by embodying it, not by talking about it, and not by attempting to convince other individuals of something.

No Need to Persuade Others

If you believe in the power of your ideas, there is no need to convince others. Simply present and share them. If you feel the need to convince someone of your idea as being better than theirs, you do not believe in yourself and who you are attempting to convince is yourself. If individuals hear many great ideas and many great perspectives, they say “Well that sounds all well and good,” but if they see someone living it, then there is the proof that it is possible.

There is an abundance of evidence that it is possible to live negatively, so therefore you can now begin to be the embodiment of the positive alternative. That in and of itself is, by definition, not condoning the negativity. Matching the negativity is condoning it on some level. Refusing to participate and providing the alternative is not condoning.

One example is what you call war. Many individuals wish there to be no war upon your planet for they “hate” war, but that is becoming the vibration of war, “hate.” Instead, you can love peace and from our perspective that is how to achieve peace. It is not by hating war, but by loving peace, by embodying peace, and by being the peaceful alternative.

You do have the power to make great changes upon the face of your planet at this time, but not by matching the status quo and utilizing your slang liberally “getting down in the dirt with them.” No. You do it by showing them that you maintain your integrity. You do not insist that they change. You are fulfilled in following your own path and being of service to yourself and others, unconditionally loving yourself and others.

It's Up to You

It's up to you. We do not insist that any of this be taken by you. It's up to you. But it is one option. As I have said, I cannot prove it. If you are willing to embody what we are speaking of, I guarantee you 100%, a guarantee your planet likes, that you will get the effect 100%. It's up to you.

Thank You

Thank you all for your willingness to literally act as ambassadors for your planet. You are doing nothing less than that. You are allowing me and the other individuals on this end of the communication as well to act as ambassadors of our society.

We understand that we can only perceive a reality that we are the vibration of, and therefore because we are unconditionally loving in our intention, we can only perceive a reality that is unconditionally loving. If you as a society would be willing to consider loving yourselves and each other unconditionally, this would be only way we can interact with you face-to-face.

Again, it is not important that you do so, and we do not insist in any way that you do so. Simply what we are saying is that you open up the doors to many possibilities by your willingness to begin to function as a global unit, as a unity in diversity, as an association of the planet Earth.

It's up to you, but either way it is our joy and pleasure, an ecstatic privilege to interact with you on this limited basis at this time. It allows us to "feel you out," and allows you to "feel us out," and get some sense of how we live. Because you also can only experience a reality that you are the vibration of, the mere fact that we can have this communication cues you into the fact that you contain what we are speaking of.

Remember, you can only perceive something if you first contain it. If you did not contain what I am sharing, you would see the ink on the page but not see any words. It is not better than any other option, but if you say you wish to create the life that you prefer, then what we are sharing with you is one way to do it.

If there were only one way, there would only be one person. Obviously, there are billions of people on your planet and this allows you to see that each person is a way, is a truth, is a universe unto themselves. You have graced each other with the agreement to co-create a seemingly common reality. If you want to, you can enjoy the fortes, strengths, and interests of those around you.

Armageddon and Transformation

As a society, you are reaching a threshold whereby our communications can now be heard. We can tell you from our observations that you are transforming as a society. What you sometimes call “Armageddon” is simply a negative interpretation of a complete transformation upon your planet. Transformation is happening right now and will continue.

In the past, when societies perceived and predicted transformation, they were only able to understand it in terms they already understood, which is that change can only occur by first breaking down the old. As a result, the flavor of the predictions is negative.

From our perspective, you don't need to buy into this. You are already within your transformational age and have been very strongly within it. Since many more individuals are beginning to empower themselves, there is an increasing momentum within your mass consciousness.

As you, each and every individual, have a consciousness, there is also a mass consciousness which represents all consciousness at the same time. Therefore, there are eddies and flows of momentum within this mass consciousness itself. Your society has reached a threshold where enough individuals are self-empowering themselves that they are having a dramatic effect and enhancement to the mass consciousness. Since you are all connected to this mass consciousness, you can ride on its coat tails.

What this means is that it will be that much simpler for you to transform in a positive way, if you choose to. It's up to you.

Interacting with Us

We once again extend our unconditional love and appreciation for your willingness to co-create this interaction with us. In general, these interactions will proceed from this point to what we call the sharing. In this particular segment, we interface and interact with individuals that are present in this interaction. Though many times individuals in your society will ask questions, we also request statements for this is an equal sharing. Though we have many things to offer, you also have many things to offer us as well.

Do not be shy and allow yourselves to interact with us on an equal level. That is always, no matter how you choose to view it, how we will view it, no matter what you believe about yourselves. We believe in you utterly. We revel in learning that much more about creation.

Each new society that we discover, each new society that we interface with, represents that much more that we know about “all that is.” It fascinates us to see the multiplicities of ways that “all that is” expresses itself throughout the multiverse.

We are all one consciousness and at the same time separate consciousness. This is one of the infinite paradoxes of “all that is” itself. “All that is” can experience anything that you can. Therefore, “all that is” can see itself as a singular individual as you perceive yourself.

At the same time, and this becomes a bit confusing to a finite mentality, it also experiences itself as all the separate things in creation simultaneously. Such is the multi-dimensional nature of “all that is” itself. We understand that we are equal. We allow for the equal sharing between us for it always enriches our exploration as well.

How do I help others achieve the success I have?

Q: Thank you for what you've been sharing. I've listened to you for about the last year and two things have occurred; one is the realization that I have the ability to interpret my reality and I've used this over the last two years.

About two years ago, I was terminated from a job and what I also did at that opportunity was use it to tell myself the truth about what I really wanted and what excited me. And in the period of the last four to five months, I have transformed every aspect of my life from being financially heavily in debt to being totally out of debt to now doing everyday exactly what excites me.

I just wanted to thank you for giving me permission to tell myself the truth by hearing it and recognizing the truth when you spoke it.

Elan: Now, before you proceed, understand we appreciate the sentiment. It is one of the things we choose to do in reflecting back to you. However, we can only reflect what you already contain, and you gave yourself the permission.

So, we understand the sentiment and the tradition upon your planet and perhaps "You're welcome" is the appropriate response. However, if you look straight into your mirror and issue that thank you it would from our perspective be a bit more appropriate. Thank you.

Proceed.

Q: One thing that really helped me shift was the idea of deserve-ability...

Elan: Oh, alright.

Q: Allowing myself to truly deserve it all.

I also bring this up because we teach workshops and seminars and I've shared a lot about the transformation that's occurred in my life. One comment that I often get from people is, "That's fine for you, but it won't work for me."

Is there anything that you could share with us to address the issue of deserve-ability--that we all deserve it all?

Elan: Well, first of all, we find it helpful to remind individuals of this by asking them, "Do you remember having to do anything to exist?" To which they generally reply, "No." Therefore "all that is" feels that you deserve to exist. What we are speaking about is reminding people to treat themselves with the same respect.

In general, a lack of deserve-ability is a response to unconsciously buying into beliefs that were fed to you as you were growing up, "You do not deserve this. You must earn this." And so forth. Those are the types of statements that individuals translate within their beliefs and they wind up saying, "I am not a deserving individual," in particular situations.

You can remind them that they did not have to do anything to exist, and the logical conclusion is that they do not have to do anything to continue to deserve to exist. This is directly related to unconditional self-love.

If they feel they do not deserve it, perhaps you can share with them that "all that is" loves them unconditionally. Remind them that unconditionally means no conditions. Remind them that because "all that is" does love them unconditionally, they can feel that, and if they are willing to feel it, they can match it. When you choose to love yourself regardless of the conditions of what you do, who you are, what you are thinking, and what you are feeling, then the lack of deserve-ability is transformed into complete deserve-ability.

Is there something specific you are seeking?

Q: Yes. One other thing that people say a lot is that they can't do what excites them because they are responsible for other people. For example, "I can't do what excites because I'm obligated in some way to take care of..."

Elan: Thank you. That allows us to explain this idea. You can only be responsible for yourself. Your ability to respond is your own ability. You cannot be responsible for anyone else; however, you can be responsible to them.

You can only be responsible for yourself. Only you can choose how you will act, and how you will respond. This is true for everyone else as well. You cannot act or be responsible for anyone else.

However, you can be responsible to them. How you are most responsible to them is by being fully responsible for yourself and being an example of how you use your own power and take responsibility for your reality. The result of being responsible for yourself is generating for yourself a preferential reality. This creates a preferential set of circumstances in your life that others can then see.

As we have earlier shared, actions are what get attention. Actions speak louder than words. Your willingness to simply say to them, "Alright. I respect what you are saying." Then go about your business embodying what you are saying.

That is what gives them the example to look back to later, if they should so choose, without your insistence that they do. If they choose to look, they will see, "Well this does work. Look at him. He's an example of it." Then perhaps you will be the one that they will wish to access to begin to do that.

Being an example--taking responsibility for your reality and your actions--is being responsible for yourself. This is the only way which you can ever truly be responsible to someone else.

We know that being excited about this material generates a wish to share it, but the strongest way you can share it is to be it. And remember, that includes the idea of not needing to convince them. If you from time to time you feel like you need to convince them, look again at where you don't believe it yourself.

Q: Thank you and my love to you.

Elan: And to you as well.

Why do people not believe life can be easy?

Q: Elan!

Elan: Eh! Bold one!

Q: Thank you for joining us.

Elan: Oh, thank you.

Q: One of the things that I've discovered lately is that fear seems to be one of the underlying emotions that people feel the most.

My husband and I live most of our life doing what excites us. We do a few things that need to be done because they need to be done, like bookkeeping, but most of the time we do what excites us...

Elan: [interrupts] Now, there are individuals excited about bookkeeping but do proceed.

Q: I'm one of those! I love the figures. I love transferring the money, so that's my excitement, not his. However, when we state that this is what we do, what we are told is that we are very lucky to be able to do this.

Elan: Well you created that luck, and you are an example that everyone also contains it. They could not even see that you are this way unless they contained the possibility of being that way themselves.

This is one fascinating paradox that we find within your society: "enviousness" or "jealousy." In general, this occurs when individuals see something they greatly desire within someone else, but they don't believe they contain it themselves.

From our perspective, this is a paradox. They would not be able to see it or appreciate it in the another individual unless they already contained it. For example, you cannot perceive that something is not red if you do not understand the concept of red. They could not understand what it means to not be excited if they didn't understand what it feels like to be excited.

You can utilize an individual already doing something you already prefer, not as a jealous approach, but as a model and a template. Because actions create the reality, if you copy the actions of someone already doing the thing you say you desire, this is one of the fastest ways to simply immediately transform to be that person.

Do proceed.

Q: What fear keeps people from doing what excites them the most?

Elan: Well, again, fear is believing that a reality that you do not prefer is most likely. So, in a given situation individuals can look at why they are afraid and allow themselves to recognize what they must believe to feel that way. Then, if they wish to change that belief, they can.

Another reason that people can commonly be afraid is that they have a sense that they have more power within them than they can handle. What they desire excites them so much that they think they cannot handle it.

From our perspective, whatever presents itself in your life shows you that you can handle it. If you can imagine it, you can handle it. You do not create a reality that you cannot handle. This perspective of a person being too powerful and that they may explode can sometimes create a fear reaction.

This often all goes back to individuals not feeling they deserve what you are creating in your life. However, this gives you the opportunity to discuss with them unconditional self-love.

Q: Thank you very much

Elan: And to you.

Can you explain the concept of divine grace?

Q: Could you please explain how the concept of divine grace--the idea that there is some kind of divine assistance that comes to us at times in our life? From your perspective how does that go along with the fact that we create our own reality?

Elan: Oh, thank you. One of the popular notions on your planet is that man has come from original sin. Although all truths are true to those who believe them, we do not believe that.

We understand that it's valid for those that do believe it, but our particular experiential understanding is that you all come from original grace. "All that is" is unconditional love itself, and you are sparks of unconditional love itself.

As you are beginning to create your reality consciously, you are beginning to understand this grace. Allow this grace to erupt from within you. Very often you then ascribe it to an "external source" but this is quite arbitrary, for that grace is the stuff that you are made of.

Does that answer the question?

Q: Yes, it does. Thank you.

Elan: We thank you for the opportunity to at least provide the alternative of original grace.

Even within the religions that assume original sin, many have the idea of the Christ consciousness, what you call Jesus, as having "died for your sins."

What would be the point of that, if you are all still sinners? It's a rhetorical question, but the idea is he was the embodiment of that grace walking upon the earth, being a living example as we are sharing.

He did not say "follow me I'm the only way," he said "This is what you contain. You too can express this. We can do it. We can transform this planet. I am an extension of 'all that is.' You are an extension of 'all that is.' Here is what it is like to act that way. Here is what it is like to unconditionally love yourself and others. I am the example."

What you in general read about him was not written by him. Never did he say, "He was the savior." A master, a true master is always the first to tell you that you are a master as well. That is how you can discern a true master. That is what you might call the litmus test for a master.

Is that all?

Q: Yes, thank you very much.

Elan: Oh, thank you.

Does a disability affect how we create reality?

Q: It's a privilege sitting here and witnessing you speak.

Elan: For us as well, we enjoy listening to you speak. This is the first time, and by the way for us every time is the first time, and so we thank you.

Q: I want to ask you a question about creating our own reality. I have heard and read that everyone chooses who they're going to be in this life for a particular purpose. I don't know whether that's true or not.

The question is that eleven months ago my son was born with a very rare syndrome called Rubinstein-Taybi. Basically, that means that he's motorically delayed and we'll know in another year, possibly two, what his mental capacity is and...

Elan: [interrupts] Largely this will also depend on how you then choose to act around him. Environmentally speaking, you can support and enhance and self-fulfill a prophecy or you can simply treat the individual as you wish him to be and minimize any of what you are speaking of.

There are many lessons to be learned by all involved in such an idea for it will enable you to be of service, him to be of service, and so forth.

Do proceed.

Q: Well, I feel two ways. I am grateful that he's here and that he's in my life, because he's changed my life profoundly, and my family's. However, also I am full of fear and pain often, because he seems... I guess it's just what you were saying. With my other two children, I assume that their potential in this life is limitless, and because he was born with a syndrome, it would seem that his potential is limited.

Elan: To add to that, in general with that approach you will change the way you treat the individual. To give the individual the best chance to express their limitlessness will be by giving him the benefit of the doubt by treating him in a similar fashion within the parameters that are in place to the best of your ability.

Q: Yes, I agree. And actually, that's the road that we're walking on. What I wanted to ask is whether we choose the form in which we are going to manifest in this life for a particular reason and is that what my son did?

Elan: That is one way to look at it and a truth. Society tends to focus on how an individual is limited in these cases and emphasizes the limitation. However, in general a limitation just means a tendency to not do a particular thing.

What is not focused on is the potential of what can be done. When you nurture what can be done you may then begin to see why they may have chosen a particular limitation so that they could focus in a different way more fully.

You have "free will." We will briefly explain our perspective of this. As physical beings you have free will. But you also have free will as a soul, or oversoul, or higher self, or whatever you wish to call it. The free will of the higher self is the one that sets down certain parameters for the physical self. However, those parameters are very, very general. They are over all categories. For example, it might be the category of abundance, perhaps the category of polarity, positive and negative, or perhaps many other very general categories such as this.

Where the free will of the physical self comes in is in how you will experience that general category. If you choose to experience negative abundance, then you will experience what you call lack, but if you choose to explore positive abundance, then you will get that symbol.

One analogy is that your higher self may say, "You will walk down this particular hall." We do not mean literally a particular hall. It is far looser than that, but it is an overall analogy. You will walk down that hall and be able to explore it.

How you walk down that hall is up to you 100%. You can mope down the hall. You can slink down the hall. You can crawl down that hall. But you can also run down the hall. You can skip down the hall. You can ride your bike. You can skateboard. You can roller skate. You can fill the hall with water and swim. You can freeze the water and ice skate.

It's up to you. You get to choose the overall way you will experience that category. This applies to you and your child as well.

Is that of service?

Q: Yes, it is very much so thank you.

Elan: We thank you and please thank the child.

Q: Yes, I will. Thank you.

Elan asks the audience a question.

Elan: May I ask you a question?

[audience does not respond]

Now, now is anyone present?

Audience: Yes [laughing]

Elan: Thank you. Are you having a good time?

Audience: Yes.

Thank you.

As a preface to this question, it is important to understand that Elan is being channeled through a man who is sitting in a chair. The questions are being directed at the man. Elan is not physically present.

Q: Hello Elan.

Elan: Greetings and good day. And by the way in case you wondered why I say, “good day,” upon my planet it is day.

[Audience laughing]

Q: Good. As you can see, they and I am always happy to see you.

Elan: Oh, thank you.

So, to speak. I'm a bit shorter than this.

[Audience laughs]

I am also a bit balder.

Q: And a lot greener.

Elan: Not really. I'm more whitish gray, but perhaps you are speaking of the electromagnetic aura, and we thank you.

Do proceed.

Q: I was thinking recently that in my quest for a more preferential life, I've examined a lot of philosophies on life on this planet. They have all been helpful, but I feel that I would not have gotten past a certain point without the information that you so graciously share with us.

Elan: Well thank you for attracting yourself to such information. You have done it.

Q: Yeah, and I'm very happy about that, and as you say the more I use it and act upon it, the more I experience it.

Elan: Well, thank you.

Q: And it works.

Elan: Can you provide a particular example that may be helpful to others?

Q: Well, I'm always using statements like "in every situation it's neutral," and "I choose the preferred meaning." And also, I have unconditional love for myself and everyone, which means don't judge.

Elan: In other words, you have begun to remove the conditions to loving?

Q: Yes

Elan: Have you found yourself in a situation that you formerly, blatantly, would have labeled negative, but were able to relabel it positive instead? Even though it seemed initially negative, you got a positive effect?

Q: Yes, definitely.

Are psychics real?

Q: I see many ads for psychics.

Elan: Alright.

Q: I've never called one, but I was wondering if they put people in touch with truly expanded consciousness.

Elan: Some.

Q: Yes, some yes and some not. Okay. So sometimes...

Elan: If you find the idea to be an exciting symbol, you can allow yourself, your trust, and your discernment to attract you to the one that will benefit you most.

Also, no matter what, you will be receive a benefit. You can use anything, even if you totally and entirely disagree with something. If you assume something is extraneous, it does not serve you. If you realize that even the fact that you disagree can allow you to define yourself that much more finitely--that much more concretely. The things that you do not prefer are just as much service to your self-discovery as the things that you do.

Q: Well, for me when I have questions, I ask you.

Elan: Well, understand if you wish to be as technical as possible about it, when you converse with what you perceive to be me, if you really wish to boil it down to it, you are talking to yourself.

Q: So, I said.

Elan: Alright, we will validate your perspective. We thank you.

Why are you interested in our planet?

Q: You mentioned earlier that you enjoy observing our planet...

Elan: From time to time.

Q: I'm wondering exactly what you're seeing about us, and what your perspective is on our on our society and culture?

Elan: We perceive that your society is in the midst of the most significant grand transformation in its entire history. What you are transforming from is limited beings.

In fact, so much have you gotten it down that you are masters of limitation itself. What you all are transforming into are limitless beings as individuals and eventually globally. Some of you already "have one foot in each door."

When you begin to do this, you will find many things to change upon the face of your planet. The most noticeable symbol at first will be your perception and experience of time itself.

One of the fascinating things is that your society uses time in a very interesting way. You assume that now, the only time there is, is the result of the past. While the past may lead to now, it is truly not the result of that past.

When you even are discussing a past, you are recreating that past right now. When you begin to understand that the past has no hold upon you, other than what you assign it, you liberate yourself, and you also then transform your relationship to time itself.

We are also observing how your attitude, perspective, and experiences are changing. This is very fascinating to us.

To be clear, at the same time, we are maintaining a physical distance. Perhaps our motto is “Shh! Baby being born!”

Q: That's very nice. Thank you.

Elan: Oh, we thank you for the birth and on some level, the invitation to behold the sight of the emergence of your society anew from the chrysalis that you are now creating. We thank you.

Is there anywhere really to get to?

Q: In our culture, there's a lot of anxiety about what life is about, what are our ultimate objectives, how should one live one's life, and what one should accomplish. Is there really anywhere to get to or anything to do?

Elan: Well, literally, no. You are always here. It is always now. Your reality moves around you.

However, this does not mean that you cannot create experiences, and appreciate experiencing the experience just because you want to.

As beings you simply are. But you can express that isness in many ways and this is one option.

When discussing "what's it all about" and "what's my purpose," we bring you back to the concept of excitement. Excitement is your own personal barometer, your own personal compass needle pointing to the magnetic north of who you chose to be. It is the reminder from your higher self, "This is who you are. This is who you are. You have chosen to forget many things but here are the markers. Here are the cones. Here are the aisles that will lead you to what you have chosen to experience, just to experience it."

Is that unsettling?

Q: Is that unsettling? No, that's very helpful.

Elan: Thank you.

Q: In any given moment, if one evaluates the choices available to him right now, and chooses that which excites him...

Elan: [interrupts] With integrity, which means cognizance of your agreements as well. But, do proceed.

Q: ...then one has the opportunity to experience whatever it is that's appropriate for them right now. There is no guesswork. It's simply choice. Is that true?

Elan: Absolutely! This is why you always have the ability and the ultimate control of your reality. Even if the choices are all negative, you always still have the ability to choose. You will find 99.99999% of the time that they are not ever all negative.

Q: Even when those things show up that are easily termed negative, like a toothache? Even that serves us and leads us to an experience that we do prefer?

Elan: If you use it. Again, you are by nature consciousness, and you are consciousness exploring, projecting itself into a physical reality. Although reality may seem quite solid, everything around you is literally a symbol within consciousness. Each symbol is something you are telling yourself.

If something comes along, and you assume this is extraneous and that it doesn't belong, you create frustration. If it exists, it exists. When you understand that nothing is extraneous, you then allow yourself to see what message it delivers.

In the case of something negative, such as a disease, what does it force you to look at? If you look at what it forces you to look at, you can benefit from it.

In the future, decide to look at it first and then you will no longer need to create the symbol to force you to look at it. Once you look at any issue that you have created a symbol to represent, it transforms.

There are no extraneous creations. If you can transform it, it has no reason to hang around. Therefore, you can transform these symbols by allowing them to deliver the message that you created them to deliver. If it forces you to look at something, be willing from now on to simply look at it without having to force yourself.

Does that make sense?

Q: It does make sense.

What is your experience of being here now?

Q: Could you describe what it's like to experience being here now?

Elan: Alright. Stand up. Turn around. Sit down. There you go.

Q: Thank you very much.

Elan: Do you understand?

Q: I do understand.

Elan: Oh, thank you.

Q: Thank you.

Elan: One of the ideas that your society will generally buy into is the need to validate anything you are doing by a complexity. Now you can do this, and again as we have said, it is a truth, and it is true as well.

But another truth that we wish to introduce to you is that it is that simple. Anything can be that simple to actually do.

Reality is complex; it is rich; it is diverse. But the doing--the living--is very simple and can be that simple if you allow it to be. We thank you for providing the example.

Q: Thank you.

Why do people resist and hold on to the past?

Q: You've said many times that the present is not a direct result of the past.

Elan: Experientially.

Q: Why is it that people have a fascination with the past and a resistance to change?

Elan: You tell me. This is one of our fascinations with your society. What is your theory on the matter?

Q: It's not an exploration that I deal in. I love change and it's not... I actually have been asking this for a long time and I was hoping you could enlighten me.

Elan: Understand the paradox. Change is one of the only constants in creation. Therefore, change is the rule not the exception. Ultimate stability is in actuality from the allowance of the change, but your society equates stability with staying the same, which is impossible. Does that at least further you along the lines of exploring?

Q: Yes.

Can you explain perfect timing?

Q: Would you also comment on the idea of synchronicity--that everything occurs in perfect timing?

Elan: Everything occurs in perfect timing. Thank you.

[Elan pauses if as complete]

Just having some fun.

The idea is this. There is literally nothing extraneous. If you label something extraneous, you can feel the effects of it seeming to be extraneous, but everything belongs. "All that is" is one event. Everything within it is interconnected. Things which seem to have nothing to do with each other do.

The bottom line of how this translates into your language as a usable concept is: there are no accidents. There are coincidences which are incidences occurring at the same time, but you can always use it all, and your willingness to interpret it as belonging gives you the key to unlock what you can get as a service from it.

Does that help?

Q: Very much. Thank you.

How does the past relate to the present?

Q: I was thinking of the filmstrip analogy that you use from time to time in terms of describing how the present is not a result of the past. That's about it. But I wanted to see if you...

Elan: Each moment is a discrete package, a discrete kit. It is analogous to the frames on your strip of film. When you run them through, they seem continuous, but they literally are their own universal event.

When you say that a frame way back there has something to do with this frame here, you then create the relationship. You then act that way, and you then get that effect, but that is the only reason that past has any bearing on the present, once you are in the present.

It is up to you. It is up to you all. At every given moment you get to choose. You get to choose the way you interpret your reality. You get to choose the attitude that you then assume from that interpretation and you get to perform the actions that are representative of that interpretation in that attitude.

If you have a negative interpretation, you have a negative attitude, and that can only lead to a negative action, which can only lead to a negative result. If you choose the positive, then your interpretation is positive, your attitude is positive, your actions are positive, and even in the same situation, you can only get a positive effect.

Truly one of the joys of creation itself is the recognition that we are sharing with you is that it is up to you. This means that everything you do is a choice. Alone, that may sound a bit burdensome, but understand that choice means there are other choices.

In closing, here's one particular perspective that we have found very helpful. Since your actions create your reality, if you find in your day-to-day reality that you have an initial negative interpretation, and begin to assume a negative attitude, you are acting from only one option, and that option is negative.

If you will begin simply, simply whenever you find you are interpreting something negative, before you act, always at least give yourself one positive alternative. You will find that that will break what you have formerly considered to be the momentum of the "automatic negative behavior."

Once you have in front of you an option which is negative side-by-side on the same table with something which is positive, it is not too difficult to choose the positive. The negative loses its hold. It is no longer the only option.

If you are willing to always before acting on anything provide at least one positive alternative, and use your excitement to choose--it's up to you but we assume you will find it quite simple to choose the positive--and then no matter what your initial interpretation was, because you redefined it, and acted according to the preferential belief, you will get the preferential reality.

You can say in your slang "look before you leap" and allow yourself to have at least one other spot to leap.

Thank you for helping me understand others.

Q: You mentioned that when we change, we experience a different aspect of ourselves and simultaneously when we interact with others, we interact with different aspects of them as well. I find this clarifies things for me a lot. It better explains how I see others change.

Elan: Yes. One tendency that we have noticed is that individuals will say, "Well I could change. I know I could, but only if he or she would change." In fact, they have it backwards.

Q: I've experienced that myself, and I appreciate that particular wording as that helps me to understand it better.

Elan: Good.

Do we all contain the same set of experiences?

Q: When you say that we all contain everything, does each one of us contain the same set of experiences?

Elan: Well, we are talking gradation, levels of totality. As ironic as that term actually is, it is all one, one idea. As we refer to it, "all that is" leaves nothing out. And one way to look at it is that it is all the same one "all that is" containing every single myriad and nuance of possible experience imaginable and a few that are perhaps presently unimaginable to you.

So, to answer your question, yes. But, as you begin to experience yourself on a gradient, as seemingly removed from that totality, each one of you creates the simultaneous apparency that the entire reality is merging into you.

Even though it seems paradoxical that there can be more than one focal point and that reality seems to merge into it, nevertheless, that is the way it expresses itself. That is a paradox, an infinite idea being perceived through finite means.

Q: You have discussed the notion that everything we experience is a consensus, that other people are willing to share that same experience, the same physicality with the same view of reality that we are, otherwise they wouldn't be in our reality. Is that what you're saying?

Elan: That is one way to experience consensus, but ultimately, your entire experience, the experience of each and every one of you, hinges on your decision about who you are in the moment and so your experience of that "consensus" can drastically alter in any given moment.

Q: Thank you.

Can you explain ascension more?

Q: There are as many ascension processes as there are perceptions; at least, that's the way I understand it. Is that correct?

Elan: Well, again, anything that you can imagine is true on some level of reality. The idea of infinite simply means there is no limit, so that would apply to the experiences of ascending, yes.

Now, our general approach is to highlight the most self-empowered version of any idea that we are discussing, the version that allows you to be that person with no one else's help. I remind you continually that you already contain it all, because, should you decide to ascribe credit to me, I will not accept it. I am simply acting as a mirror to what you already know.

Does that answer the question?

Q: Not really. I'm working with a group right now that is working with a process called The Awakening Process.

Elan: Okay. Describe it.

Q: It starts by me leaving my bed, moving into dimensional reality, and then ascending and actually leaving the 3rd dimension and moving into the 4th.

Elan: With the intent of leaving the 3rd for good?

Q: No. Temporarily.

Elan: Okay. In order to experience more of yourself? Yes?

Q: Correct.

Elan: Alright. And then you want to bring that back to this particular reality?

Q: Yes, after a four-day transformational state.

Elan: Okay. Four days. Got it.

Q: And then I move back into our 3rd dimension to continue on with a two-week process of a physical transformation based on the cellular change.

Elan: Okay. That is one way to express it: on a gradient, step by step, following a process.

But, ultimately, remember what we have shared before. After you have followed your process and the time has passed, any change that you experience will result from the decision at the end, rather the process itself. In other words, you can skip the process if you choose.

So certainly, the gradient process, step by step like you described, is one way to express the idea of ascension.

But allow me to clarify something else that we mention, which is that your body exists within your consciousness. Individuals will sometimes assume, "Well my consciousness cannot shift until my body shifts, until it evolves, until it changes its cellular structure, the expression of its DNA, and so forth." This is very creative, a very useful way to shift, but there are other ways. The interesting point is that, mechanically speaking, the body does not change first, not matter what. The consciousness always changes first.

Any change that seems to occur in the body, on a cellular level for example, without exception, always was caused by, and initiated first by, a change in the consciousness.

So if an elaborate process is what you feel you require to shift your consciousness, no matter what that process is, no matter what degree of complexity it contains to allow you to say, "Well I did something, I can now expect a result," the change always first comes in consciousness.

Does that make sense?

Q: Yes, it does. We do not require outside assistance to have an ascension process?

Elan: Absolutely not. Although you can attract that if you wish. All options are valid. All approaches are absolutely equally valid. We are not discussing our particular point of view to invalidate any other approach, but simply to simplify the idea, simply to define what many of these approaches actually accomplish, in a kernel, in a crystal that's right in front of you. Again, we are not invalidating the process.

There are an infinite number of processes that an individual or individuals can create, but the point of what I am saying is that it ultimately results in a given moment in your decision, "I am now ascended. I am now transformed." And it is that decision in that moment that results in the cellular change, that results in any type of physical change that you experience and not actually the process.

And ironically, paradoxically, when you make that decision, when you become that person, whether you use the process as a rationalization or not, ironically, you will immediately realize what I am saying. For one of the first ideas of ascending or being willing to express yourself in a more limitless way is, "Ah! It wasn't the process! It was me! It was me all along."

Q: So, when I feel energies around me at night, that's my own consciousness coming in to work with my own vibration?

Elan: Absolutely. Even the idea of what you call a "spirit guide" or any external manifestation literally exists within you. Now, you can perceive them as "other beings" to allow you to experience very specific nuances of your consciousness.

By all means, it is quite valid to say and create the ideas, "This is this guide, this is this consciousness, and this is this energy." But what you have said is truly most accurate. It is all actually you.

Q: Well, so, I'm in charge?

Elan: Well, it is up to you! I suggest that when you actually experience that, you will say it slightly differently. Take that question mark and straighten it out into an exclamation point. When you do that, you will simply be making that decision, and you will be quite definite about it and "unswerving." Rather than saying, "Well, I create it all?" you will say "I create it all!"

Do you wish to do this?

Q: That is the question.

Elan: Ah! Only you can answer that one! I can take a stab at it. I can perceive that, yes, you wish to do it, but I also perceive that there is some hesitation, some trepidation, and some fear.

What is it that you feel could be a negative result of simply taking back your power and creating your life consciously?

Q: My fear is that I would draw in unknown energies of an unknown origin.

Elan: Ah, unknown, unknowing. So, you could discover more of yourself? Yes?

Q: Since we are all part of one, yes.

Elan: Perhaps you may consider something. I will never insist that you do any of this, simply suggest that "unknown origins" are no longer relevant when you understand that the reality exists within you consciously and knowingly. There is no outside. There is no origin which is not you.

Do you assume that you would intend to harm, frighten, or have a negative result from yourself to yourself?

Q: Not intentionally. No.

Elan: Alright, well, what we are speaking of here is conscious intention. No intention, just "slipping in there." When you make the decision that this is your intention, this becomes your clear intention, instantly and across the board.

If you make that decision then nothing can happen unintentionally, unless you decide to allow unintentional things to happen. If anything seems contrary to your intention, then it is just you interpreting things as being contrary. You are the one making that interpretation.

I assume you wish to experience your transformation in a positive way. Yes?

Q: Absolutely.

Elan: Then simply build that into your decision, that you wish to experience transformation in a positive way.

Be very specific about what your decision is. Should something come along in your experience, then you can revise your decision if you wish. Use the feedback in a positive way to more clearly decide what you want.

Be willing to establish who you are from what seems to be available. Make the decision about who you are from what seems to be available and automatically refine it as necessary.

Does this help?

Q: Yes, thank you.

How do we heal the Earth?

Q: Can the Earth, Mother Earth, just make a decision, "poof!" to change? Why is it going through a process like we are?

Elan: Well, your question contains the answer. I have introduced the idea of spontaneous redefinition and changing your entire reality instantly. Perhaps you have not quite made the decision to change your reality yet yourself?

Everything is an external reflection of you, across the board, including your planet. Yes, it is also a consciousness, but again, not truly apart from your own consciousness, and it is within your consciousness.

Should you now decide to shift who you are and maintain that for "a period of time," you will see the changes in the Earth that you are talking about.

Indecision comes from each and every one of you. Remember that indecision is a decision to not decide.

You are also assuming that "Mother Earth," as you have put it, is taking her time. My particular observation is that the consciousness that you call Mother Earth is right there, ready and responding perfectly in every given moment.

Is there something specific to which you are referring?

Q: Well, part of this change has to do with healing, I believe.

Elan: Okay. Are you assuming and therefore deciding that an individual who is unwell must go through a process of healing before they can be well? Can you understand that healing, just as disease, is also a decision in a given moment?

In other words, your question implies a process, it implies stretching out the result from the decision and therefore your experience is that the Earth is doing the same thing.

Could you also just decide that the Earth is well?

Q: Yes.

Elan: If you are willing to decide that you are whole, which automatically includes “health-full,” and then allow your perception of the perfect response of what you perceive to be Earth consciousness to shift, you will see that the Earth is already doing this.

If this does not make sense, please continue.

Q: No, it makes sense.

Elan: You do not sound too thrilled about it. I assume perhaps I'm out of line. I assume that once you firmly grasp the idea of your empowering being right at your immediate disposal, that you might just be a little bit more excited!

How should I deal with a sinus problem?

Q: I wanted to talk a little bit about health. Because I seem to be manifesting some disease.

Elan: Okay. Describe it if you wish.

Q: Sinuses. It's been going on for months and months and months. I wish that this question was of general interest to everyone, but I feel it's pretty specific.

Elan: Well, the idea is this, that your sinus cavities are very sensitive to electromagnetic changes and shifts. This is because of a particular substance in your sinuses known as magnetite, which is also involved with your sense of spatial orientation.

This is all a symbol of what's happening in your life. You may be more sensitive to any changes that are occurring. At the same time, you do not need to experience those changes in negative terms.

You can allow yourself to be aware of changes without resisting those changes and, therefore, causing friction and pain. Anyway, that is the more general idea.

Also, do not allow any particular event, pain, or discomfort, to change your positive decision about who you are. I assume that you have decided to be a person who is physically well. Yes?

Q: Yes, most definitely.

Elan: So, when you maintain that decision, any particular sensitivity is very short lived. When you use that friction, that discomfort as evidence to create the decision, "Well, I now must be sick," then you actually perpetuate a process which would otherwise be generally rather fleeting, if you notice it at all.

So, to keep "on subject," so to speak, re-establish and maintain the preferred decision of who you are, very specifically to include the idea, not that "I am not sick" but that "I am well." Do not run from what you don't prefer, but simply be what you do prefer.

This is why we said earlier, that although you can, you need not establish who you are being that you no longer prefer in order to be the new you.

Q: So, what you're saying is, that I don't have to say, "Why am I creating this?" I don't have to go through that process. I can just decide that I am healthy?

Elan: Absolutely, and you may wish to be more specific than that. If the decision specifically reflects who you are and what you wish to do, you will be so busy going about your business that any so-called "recovery period" will simply be immediate and automatic and you will forget all about any discomfort.

In other words, instead of simply deciding "I am healthy" have the decision be completely who you are, "I am this person who enjoys this, and who expresses that," and fill in the blanks.

When you are that whole person, there is no fragmentation or disease in the process and you become so busy being that person that rather than the one sitting around focusing on your sinuses.

Does that make sense?

Q: You've been watching me, huh?

Elan: Your privacy is completely intact.

Q: Actually, I have been doing a lot of sitting around. Now, alright, I do see that.

Elan: Here is something else to consider. If you are sensitive to electromagnetic changes and are remaining physically static and sit around, you are more likely to perceive that sensitivity in a negative way. If you are moving about, you are allowing the sensitivity, you are allowing the energy to move through you, rather than "well up," or seem to accumulate.

Q: I have noticed that when I am physically active that it was most definitely a relief.

Elan: Great. And to use your language liberally, "see you later."

Q: Wow! I actually feel better already! I haven't been breathing in months!

Elan: Alright, well you have changed your decision and you have demonstrated in no uncertain terms that you get the results of that decision instantaneously.

Can you sense how enjoyable this is to us?

Q: Elan, when you come here to do this, this is very enjoyable for us.

Elan: Oh. Alright.

Q: Are you experiencing that also? Do you sense love and enjoyment back at you?

Elan: Absolutely, I create my version of it, which could appear, when looking at my reality in linear terms, to be love from you.

In my decision of who I am, there is no lack of self-love. I completely, 100%, love myself and others, and create reality and circumstance 100%, with the complete trust that I create it, and its very existence is to support my experience.

Though when I interact with you, I can create the awareness that you "love me," though what you would perceive as your emotion toward me, I create my own version of in order to have an experience. I am simply explaining the mechanics.

In other words, yes, with a little explanation.

Understand one other thing, if you wish. Whatever you perceive that you get out of these interactions, I get just as much out of it.

I understand, in no uncertain terms, that to me, you all exist within me. And as I am willing to interact with different aspects of my own consciousness through seeming external "others," I then learn more about myself.

My particular society's approach is different than your own, and we are not exploring the types of limitations that you will often choose to explore. Therefore, we do not generally interact with that aspect of ourselves on a daily basis.

Interaction with your society affords me the opportunity to begin to look at some of those ideas, although always do I do so from my empowered self. What I am getting at is that the favor that you are doing, from my end, to me, is immeasurable and it allows me to understand myself on a very complete level, apart from the mass, general experience of my society.

My society also happens to be very interlinked, and I will say, "telepathically," as opposed to "telepathically." Empathy implies that you create your version, experience your version, but you can in that sense, mold your version so closely to the intention of the seeming others that it seems that you are reading their mind; it seems that you are "in touch."

What technically is going on is that we are creating the same thoughts at the same time. Therefore, anything that is to my awareness, for anyone in my society who is so inclined, they too immediately have that experience, and interact with it from their particular, individual point of view to reflect back to themselves as well.

So, not only do I get something out of this but so do many members of my society, who are so focused in that type of self-expression. And so, we thank you.

Q: I thank you for that sharing you just gave; I really enjoyed that answer.

Elan: Alright, I thank you for enjoying it and creating the enjoyment.

Are there are other individuals with you?

Q: We've been in this room for over an hour and I've been sensing Bashar the whole time. I see him in my mind's eye reclining in a chair. I guess I would like some validation, or I'm just wondering where he is?

Elan: Will you allow me to use your language liberally? We're buddies.

Q: He's not with you right now?

Elan: At this particular time there are several individuals present; he is one, yes. He is, by the way, very busy, all the time. We can barely "nail him down," to use your vernacular. Fortunately, we always are "in touch."

What did you do today?

Q: Could you also tell me what you did with your day today?

Elan: Today, I did several things. One was that I involved myself in an "energy exchange" with other individuals of my planet. Perhaps, very loosely speaking, this is what you would simply refer to as having a game of catch with a ball of energy. That is a very loose interpretation, for now, for the imagery that it will allow you to create will do.

Another thing I did was to spend some time in spacecraft taking readings and interacting with other various individual societies that we are communicating with at this time. And then, you.

Q: Thank you.

Are you in your spaceship?

Q: "Where are you?" In a sense, you've already answered that. Might you be on your mothership for a change?

Elan: Well, I might be, but I am not. At this particular moment I am upon the face of my planet.

Q: You're actually there and not in your spacecraft?

Elan: Yes.

Q: That's unusual.

Elan: Not really. What you refer to as "projection table," and again this is very loose, also occurs upon the planet from time to time, though perhaps you would refer to them as, and I mean this quite loosely, portable tables.

How big is your society?

Q: I had the idea that roughly 70% of your population, 250 million in total, might normally be off the planet.

Elan: From time to time, this is the case. This will vary. There has recently been, for lack of better translation, a celebration.

How do you celebrate?

Q: How do you celebrate?

Elan: Simply, this occurs when many of us find ourselves in close proximity to one another, or on the planet at the same time. While we're there...I will use your language once again, this does not quite, quite, quite translate, "We like to party."

Now the reason that it does not translate is because our entire attitude and life has that type of allowance in it, so there is not the distinction, "I am partying now, now I am not." We are always expressing joy and ecstasy, which, one way to interpret it into your language is "party."

Q: Like dancing, singing, and music?

Elan: Not in the way that you understand, but perhaps a version of that, from time to time, will spontaneously arise, as does everything that we do. That is why I hesitate to call it a "celebration." It is not that formal, and it is quite spontaneous.

What's another society that you interact with?

Q: I also wanted to know if you would share more with us about the other civilization you've been communicating with today?

Elan: Alright, the civilization that I was taking the aforementioned "readings" on, do not express themselves quite in the same physical terms that you are accustomed to. They are, perhaps you can say, "energy beings" that still have the ability to express physical manifestations. Those physical manifestations are instantaneous, and instantaneously responsive to the slightest change in consciousness.

Our perception of them occurs through the idea of the physical manifestations, and we are able to directly interact with them "telepathically." But we can also communicate to them through "observation," by simply taking a measurement, or a reading, or an observation of their particular physical manifestation along what you would refer to as a "linear timeline." We can translate, by interpretation of the physical symbols, their intended message.

And it is an interesting "game" that we play. Did this translate at all?

Q: Oh, yes, it did.

Elan: By the way, there are many beings like this. We are in proximity to this particular society, and they are also from their point of view taking in and relishing certain approaches that our society have as well. In fact, some of the physical manifestations that they have in fact manifested are temporarily similar bodies to our own. But only for fleeting moments.

In other words, they are trying us on, so to speak.

Does that make sense?

Q: Okay, so they're creating a body form as one of the forms.

Elan: Spontaneously, and generally fleeting, very quickly. Now, this is one way that we can communicate back to them along those lines, when not "automatically" directly linked "telepathically," although that is not particularly accurate, I will not go into the details.

We can also create energy manifesting as physical events and have a conversation from one set of physical events that they are creating to another set of physical manifestations and results that we are creating. I was functioning, you can say very loosely speaking, as secretary for the event. Does that make sense?

Q: Yeah, it's cool.

Elan: Oh, alright, actually it is quite temperate.

Q: Okay.

Elan: Alright, is there anything else?

Q: No, thank you, not right now.

How do I explain why I want a divorce?

Q: I have a question. This might be too much of a personal question for everyone else.

Elan: We trust the synchronicity of whatever we attract and when you are all willing to also contain that idea, simply then nothing will be extraneous in your reality. Do proceed with the trust that the timing is impeccable.

Q: Thank you. I am in the process of wanting a divorce from my husband without a condition. I'm having a hard time with that because I'm not giving him a reason why I'm divorcing him, and that's not acceptable to him.

Elan: Would you, in a similar circumstance desire such a reason?

Q: Well, I know... See, I'm looking at it as though he is an aspect of me and...

Elan: Alright, before you proceed, answer my question. Were "the shoe on the other foot," would you desire a reason?

Q: Well, yes, I guess.

Elan: Why?

Q: Well, I guess... Well, I mean... It should be obvious, I guess.

Elan: Well, so that you can grow and learn from the experience? Yes?

Q: Yes.

Elan: What is your reason for depriving him of that opportunity to grow and learn?

Q: As far as explaining my reasons to him?

Elan: Yes, so that he may learn and grow or do whatever. Your responsibility is simply to make that communication, not to be responsible for his reaction. But why do you assume that he has attracted such a situation that he cannot handle?

Q: Cause he won't acknowledge it when I say that I want a divorce and want to leave. What I basically say is, "it's just not bringing me joy and we don't ever do anything together and there's no supporting of each other." It's just... I... I don't know.

Elan: Alright, what will you do?

Q: Well, I don't want to... I'm so stagnant and it's not bringing me joy and I know that that it's not serving me.

Elan: By the way, ironically, being indecisive, technically speaking, is a decision. It is a decision which is distinct from not making a decision or making one.

Q: Got you. I was going more on the wanting, I guess. I was focusing on the joy and wanting to take the action, not the decision. So, it's the decision that comes before the wanting?

Elan: Not necessarily, but assuming that the wanting has already happened, the decision would be next, and in fact again, you have made a decision to remain stagnant.

Q: Yeah, and I don't want to do that.

Elan: Well, you have tried that one on already. Now what will you do?

Q: Make a decision to act.

Elan: Alright, congratulations! You have transformed your reality, spontaneously and completely. How does it feel?

Q: Good! Thank you!

Elan: I simply suggest that no matter what you do (and I would not advise you as to one specific idea or another) that your decision be phrased in such a way--listen up, all of you--whereby the wording does not contain any hint or nuance of what you don't want, who you no longer wish to be, and simply is the establishment of who you are.

So that you are not running from who you were, you are not running from any negative idea, but are simply walking to who you are, and thereby, by convention distancing yourself from any former negative decision about yourself.

But even the hint of running away from something still contains the idea of that something very strongly, and you cannot "get away from anything" as you contain it all. It simply is the new decision, and not the old decision. Understand the distinction?

Q: Yes

Elan: Alright.

Can you help me understand ascension?

Q: Elan, I want to understand more about the idea that we're creating our own reality. I call it drama. My everyday drama is how I choose to see it. Whether it is through relationships with others or within my own space or it is...

Elan: [interrupts] Does "drama" have a connotation, since that is your decision? "It's a drama?" Does it have a particular negative connotation?

Q: No, just life... flow, to me.

Elan: Alright. Generally speaking, in the way that you express your language, "drama" is serious. Drama implies many rocky interactions. Yes?

Q: Well, let me just re-phrase that.

Elan: Alright. Realize, and this applies to all of you, that your words are very revealing. I am not picking on you... but you could also be creating a "musical" or a "comedy" instead of a "drama."

Q: Yes!

Elan: Do proceed.

Q: In keeping with that comedy, I've moved into creating circumstances and decisions and moving forward into the ascension process. And now I look at it and consider it very confusing because I'm bringing forth many different perspectives and many different aspects that are very confusing because they're new to me.

Elan: By the way, confusing, or "co-fusing," is simply taking many things that you are now observing and interpreting and simply "re-establishing" your relationship to them, and ultimately it winds up with a decision between the options. It's a fusing of your intention.

Q: Yes, I have a few. In some of the information that has been brought to me, I don't understand some of the information that I've heard here and there about spiritual hierarchies and things like a galactic federation and about how they work in alliance with one another and in conjunction with the ascension process.

Elan: Let me see if this does not shed some light on this idea. From our perspective, there is no hierarchy. The reason that I say this emphatically and specifically is because one of the qualities of the galactic community is complete and 100% equality between all participants. That does not mean that there is not organization or coordination and it also does not mean there is not any dispensation of particular actions and approaches.

It is only due to your "human interpretation" that you assume that there must be a hierarchy since that is how you create your society. You interpret through what you know.

From our perspective and my personal perspective, there is no hierarchy in the way that you are using that word. Therefore, there is no linear qualitative difference between any "job," any approach, any particular "duty," if you wish to call it that. There is complete equality.

There is no ascension in the aspect of moving through a set of "ranks." There is no ascension in the aspect of moving to a greater ability, from a lesser ability, as being "worse" and "better."

When any individual from any society becomes aware of an idea, they initially interpret that idea through their vocabulary, through their present understanding.

In ancient times on your planet some people could sense that great change was coming. They were going to experience things they had not experienced before. However, since they did not have that experience, they had to translate that into terms they understood, such as catastrophes, and apocalypses, and dire consequences.

They were not incorrect; they were just interpreting things in terms they understood to the best of their ability. The only way they knew how to interpret great change was through a complete "tearing down" of the present structure: a revolution, a rebellion, death, and destruction.

Rather than simply a perception of change it was "change" in their archaic vocabulary, cataclysm, destruction. The sensing of the ancient seers and the ancient prophesies were accurate in determining or predicting great change but were not accurate in determining the methodology.

They did not know certain things that would come into play between then and now that would allow that change to occur through individuals, that would allow that change to occur with what you call "the hundredth monkey" mass phenomenon.

A large propensity of human consciousness can still only function, can only imagine a society functioning through a hierarchy, otherwise they feel there would be chaos.

And although there is still organization when you are 4th density (between physical and non-physical), it is not perceived through a hierarchical filter. Anything that you attract is a perspective and then you get to choose.

If you simply understand that all the inner voices that you hear are merely choices that you are presenting to yourself, then you get to choose from them. It is always up to you to choose. And my suggestion is to trust what is comfortable to you, to trust what you're vibrating at, what excites you, what moves you.

No one else is an authority until you in your decision, build into your agreement what they are saying. Ultimately, your agreement is the only thing that seems to create external authority and, of course, by extension a hierarchy. Individuals that truly begin to express their self-empowerment have no desire to have anyone else follow them, to take care of them, for the concept of taking care of does not completely acknowledge their own individual power.

Understand that a true "master" would be the first one to tell you that you are yourself already a master and would therefore do nothing for you, though perhaps the way that you would interpret their actions might loosely translate as a "coach."

Is this helpful?

Q: Well, my perception is that we are all created equal and there is no hierarchy and we're all lateral.

Elan: Now, do understand, you contain it all. You can say there is a "hierarchy" or there is not.

Q: Correct.

Elan: But if you wish to be accurate, there is a "hierarchy," and there is not. Now you get to choose, not negating or invalidating a "hierarchical" approach, but simply choosing something that vibrates more strongly to who you know yourself to be. Which is to say, "I validate that there are hierarchical expressions, but that is not my personal approach."

Now when you said to me, "I believe in equality," I believed you. I will not "call you" out on that. The conviction was evident in your expression. Now the question is, since you're going to trust in something anyway, like I said, will you trust in your own knowingness, or will you fall into agreement with someone else's story?

Q: That is the question.

Elan: Thank you. Do understand a question is simply an answer upside down. So, the answer is right there.

Q: Everything is fun with you Elan, it's great!

Elan: Oh, thank you... With you all as well.

Do we have roles to play?

Q: Are we here specifically to take on specific roles? Most people seem to feel that there's a specific purpose here for all of us.

Elan: Keep in mind that is also a decision you are making about yourself. But, yes, you can absolutely experience that result and that reality. However, that is not because this was "predestined" or "preordained," but simply because, for whatever reason, you have fallen into agreement with that idea.

Truly, you are a 100% spark of creation in every given moment who cannot easily be "buttonholed" into a particular role. You may assume roles to explore certain specific ideas, but when you decide purposefully who you are and when that decision is a function of your personal preference, then roles that you assume will be positive roles. So, you are not "stuck" in any role.

When you play through an experience that you have created, it will end or transform the moment you make a new decision about yourself, with no exceptions. If the new decision is, "I am that same person," then one moment later, you are, absolutely.

If you have decided to express yourself in a hierarchical fashion which results in you feeling "lesser" and feeling that there is some "greater" aspect to aspire you to, you can simply make a new decision. In your new decision, you can simply state, "I am an equal to all of creation; I choose to express that equality in everything that I do, and therefore I choose to perceive that equality in others as well." Then you will be a 4th density (between physical and non-physical) physical being and the veil of hierarchy will dissolve. Understand?

Q: I understand.

Elan: Alright.

Q: So, as this planet is evolving in its "frequency," as yours is, as you say...

Elan: Well, we do not necessarily consider it an "evolution," but simply a conscious movement, but I understand what you mean. Do proceed.

Q: Okay, let's just say for the time that we are consciously moving forward. Does the Earth affect all of the universe?

Elan: Well, from your perspective absolutely. As I have said, when you change yourself, everything else then seems to change. Remember, everything is multidimensional, infinite, and eternal. Everything contains an infinite number of facets and aspects. Since you are in linear reality you do not truly have the experience of interacting with the entire infinity of facets.

When you make a decision and choose to explore, you will attract the perception of facets of anything that is relevant. When you change your decision, the new decision will begin to manifest. You will interact with the corresponding facet of any other thing that you consider to be external. In other words, yes, the entire universe seems to change because you are now operating through a different set of facets within the infinite potentiality. Does that make sense?

Q: I understand, but is there ever one perception?

Elan: Well, if you consider "all that is," it is at the same time a multiplicity and yet one perception. This is a bit hard to translate and explain because it is an infinite concept, and at least for now, you are choosing to perceive life through a finite point of view. So, the answer is yes and no.

As you begin to expand your consciousness and expand your acceptance and allowance of more of yourself, you will find that paradox becomes the rule and not the exception. Since truly you contain it all, it is never never never this or that. It is always both. And that always puts you right back into the center to choose between them with absolutely equal ability. Alright?

Q: Yes, thank you.

Elan: I thank you as well. What will you do?

Q: I'll decide to stay with what's in my center and make those decisions from that center of my being at all times.

Elan: Alright. You can never stray too far from yourself, for everywhere you turn, there you are. And so, your willingness to simply be more direct about knowing that will allow part of your decision to be the certainty that you are now willing to honor who you are and settle for nothing less no matter what you do. Remember, no seemingly external person can possibly know you better than you know yourself.

Q: Nothing is wrong; everything's right; it's always a choice.

Elan: Everything's perfect, a perfect manifestation of whatever it is. Yes. Beginning to exercise choice consciously is the only thing that if you embrace it and begin to express it, will immediately and fully transform your entire reality.

You can do it on a gradient, if you feel that completely transforming would be too sudden, but when you do it on a gradient, you are simply making decisions closer and closer to the you you wish to be, so that you don't have to be all that you at once. And ultimately, where you end up is that you.

So, you get to decide. Would you like to take the scenic route or would you to simply “beam yourself up,” so to speak?

Q: Is that mother process beaming? I don’t wanna know.

Elan: Well, you do...

Q: Yes, I do.

Elan: But I won’t tell you. The idea is that there are many creative, physical opportunities in your future, and your particular “fiction” will often predict future reality.

Are you a future incarnation of the channel?

Q: Speaking of futures, you're a future self of Andrew (the person speaking for you). Is that correct? Because that's what I heard during the break.

Elan: From your perspective it would seem like we are in the future. My particular reality, planet, experience vibrates at a completely different time flow than your own. It is, approximately, for the purposes of comparison, ten times faster. What you would perceive as ten of your years would play out in my reality as a hundred years of history. Plus, our particular relationship to time is far different from your own. Because we are already on a more accelerated time frame in comparison to your own, we cannot perceive each other. Literally there are "universes within a grain of sand."

There are an infinite number of overlapping ideas and dimensions. They separate each other by "wave lengths" and one of the expressions of the wave lengths is the flow of time stream. From the channel's point of view, I could appear to be a future incarnation. From my point of view, he could appear to be a past self. But our realities are not in that type of sync, for direct comparison.

Q: Well, you've thrown a warm blanket around the ascension process.

Elan: Well, thank you. What a lovely image. Covering yourself with more of yourself.

I have a relationship success story.

Q: I just wanted to share something. Do you know that this is my husband? We're married. Maybe you know that.

Elan: Congratulations!

Q: Thank you, I wanted to say that. I don't know. About 6 or 7 months ago, we completely transformed our relationship.

Elan: Alright. You made the decision.

Q: Right, and it was through the awareness of something that you told me or reminded me. And that specific awareness was that the present is not the result of the past, unless I say so.

Elan: Thank you--very well put.

Q: And so that really worked, we just sort of forgot all those things that weren't working or just moved off of them.

Elan: Well, notice how that fits into the mechanics that we have just discussed. When you make the decision of who you are consciously, according to preference you can simply make that decision because you're making it, or you can make it with a justification or a rationalization.

If that rationalization is "I am this person because I have done this in the past," you do not actually experience a result of that past, you recreate the past in the present as an "excuse" to make a particular decision in the moment. So, you create the apparency where it seems like, "I am affected by the past." If you are willing to make the decision based on who you are, what you prefer and what excites you with your integrity, then the "baggage" of the past is no longer relevant to the new decision.

Q: Oh, so I... Oh! I get it... So really... I just made another choice, you're saying.

Elan: Yes. You always do.

Q: Alright, okay!

Elan: Now if that choice is most agreeable to you... congratulations!

Q: Oh, it is and thank you. And I wanted to share that because it almost seemed like your voice came in my head and said that, although I know it wasn't your voice, "the present is not the result of the past." So, I just wanted to share that.

Elan: Alright, may I ask you a question by way of what you would refer to as one moment? Alright? A testimonial? When you shifted your decision, did the other individual seem to change?

Q: Completely!

Elan: A miracle!

Q: A miracle, yes! It is a miracle!

Elan: Alright, I am being facetious, for "miracles" are the rule and not the exception once you begin to allow your decision to include that definition.

Q: Yeah, it's amazing how people seem to miraculously shift, and someone who you just hated last week, all of a sudden, you don't hate them. You know what I mean?

Elan: Well not exactly, but I will take your word for it.

Q: But I mean it's like a whole 180 degrees from what seemed to be hopeless because, "Just wait a minute. I'm going to make another choice."

Elan: Alright, you re-create yourself 100% in every given moment and now you have re-created yourself to interact with another facet of any other individual that you perceive. Miraculously, they seem to have changed. Instead, simply, you have made the decision.

And you are living the "fruits" of that decision as you all do with every decision you make, whether "positive" or "negative."

Q: Ah, I just wanted to share that.

Elan: Oh, thank you. I thank you all for your willingness to co-create this interaction in such a way where we may all share aspects and reflections of each other's consciousness in tandem and in love and joy.

If there is anything that you perceive that is joyful from this interaction, from what you perceive to be me, pat yourself on the back. It is you. I am merely a mirror and can only reflect back the degree of brilliance from the original source material. So, celebrate the recognition in yourself, that as you expand, you now attract the means, the method, the tools, the keys to make the decision about who you are consciously.

What can I do about being very fearful?

Q: First of all, thank you very much for this...

Elan: [interrupts] Oh, one moment, may I ask you a question?

Q: Yes. Who am I?

Elan: Who are you?

Q: I am a person who just recently has finally discovered that I deserve to be happy. And I made the decision to come down here tonight in this horrendous weather all by myself and all the time I was in the car I felt completely calm and I thought, "if I made this decision, I must know what I'm doing and I'm going to carry it through and there was no mishap or anything to get here and I..."

Elan: Is this different from how you would have approached it before, and did you get a different result?

Q: Yes, very different.

Elan: Then I thank you for being a living example of what I am saying. Could you be just a little more specific?

Q: About myself?

Elan: Yes. Who are you?

Q: Well, I still have a lot of boogie men in the closet.

Elan: Okay.

Q: And I still have a lot of fears that I'm facing.

Elan: Do you enjoy expressing this part of yourself?

Q: No.

Elan: Okay, then I suggest, now that you are being very definite and conscious about who you are, that you work into you decision about who you are some wording that allows you to experience the freedom of who you are without the self-imposed shackles of these ideas.

Remember, when you are asserting and deciding who you are, be willing to word it in the positive. You don't need to define yourself in terms of who you do not wish to be, or who you are not. Just say who you are.

If I were to ask you who you are, and you had formulated a way to express yourself which was no longer relevant to "boogie men" and "fears in the closet" how would you word that?

Q: I am a person who can make my own decisions, trusting that the outcome will be what I prefer.

Elan: How does that feel?

Q: Good!

Elan: How does it feel to understand, in no uncertain terms, that you are that person, right now?

Q: Very good.

Elan: Are you willing to trust that decision by maintaining it, no matter what?

Q: Yes!

Elan: Well, congratulations! Welcome to more of yourself! No big deal.

How do decisions relate to human evolution?

Q: How are you today?

Elan: Perfect and you? Who are you?

Q: I'm a healer.

Elan: Alright. Congratulations!

Q: Thank you. Can you speak of the concept of making decisions in light of the evolution of the human species? You had mentioned that we can instantly shift our life and bodies physically by just making a decision.

Elan: Well, as we have explained many times, in many different ways, in many different approaches, from our perspective, your body exists within your consciousness and is a direct reflection of your consciousness.

One approach is that your consciousness is within and the result of your physical body. Therefore, you have the idea that in order for your consciousness and society to express itself more fully and become more “advanced,” you need to have a sort of physical expansion, like an evolution to justify your development and a conscious expansion. If you assume that point of view and decision, you get the effect and the evidence that supports that. “Yes, I have made a physical transformation. Now I can ‘house’ more consciousness.”

However, another way to look at it is that your body exists within your consciousness, and when you shift your consciousness, your body shifts accordingly.

If you wish to be most accurate, it always first begins in the consciousness. Even when a person winds up achieving the effect. "I can now expand my consciousness because I have evolved my DNA or whatever;" they will experience a shift. They will experience more of their consciousness. When you have that approach, it will seem like the physical change is what allowed this.

But here's a question for you, and I ask this assuming you have taken this approach, where did more of this consciousness that you've become come from? If that consciousness grows it must come from somewhere.

The answer: it came from you.

You could say, "Where? Out there?" Well, that's only one way to look at it.

Q: So, there doesn't need to be a need of change in our "morphogenic structure" of which "the mass consciousness" is a part of?

Elan: Your "morphogenic structure," though you have been taught to believe is an environmentally determined factor, is a consciousness determined factor. It already shifts, when you shift.

One of the obvious ways to see this in "dis-ease" and "dis-comfort" which are the effects of negative decisions, whether they be conscious or unconscious

But this takes place on a genetic level as well. "Transmutation," "permutation," "evolution," and so forth are simply and foundationally a reflective response to a shift in consciousness.

Q: I notice that you are using the terminology "decision" when you used to use the word "intention." There's got to be a reason for that, because "intention" is always something you can "put off until tomorrow," whereas "decision" seems to be more immediate in its effect.

Elan: Well, congratulations, in very creatively structuring the answer into the question. In the process of simplifying and bringing things down to their most "basal" elements, being "intention-ful" is one way to describe it but making a decision has more definitely, consciously commanded implications.

As I've mentioned, you have been "taught" in your society to understand that things occur on a "gradient," and this plays into the way you define your reality and your perception of it.

When we introduced you to the idea of your vision, the word "intention" allowed you to still come at it from your older decision, your older point of view, and your less empowered point of view. And it allowed you begin to entertain slowly, be "spoon fed," perhaps slowly giving the idea of you having some kind of say in what's going on.

Now. As you have pointed out, we now choose to make things more definite. This simply makes them more of a complete and purposeful and utter unswerving statement.

Q: So, there is no more methodology, other than, as you have stated: conscious decision, trust in that decision, and then taking action to support the trust in that decision?

Elan: Yes, which you already do.

Q: Right.

Elan: And, therefore, all this is "no big deal." There's nothing you need to learn, no resource that you need to attract or create.

Q: I have found in this past month that it does work.

Elan: Thank you for allowing that to be worked into your decision. Being specific about being effectual can also be quite useful.

Who else are you?

Q: "You talk'n to me?" Well, uh, to use a cliché, I'm my "path of power."

Elan: Alright, when will you get there?

Q: I'm there.

Elan: Well, are you on your path or are you the actual path?

Q: Ah!

Elan: Wording is very key. Not to correct you, for that is truly impossible. I can simply provide another alternative that you may wish to choose. But wording is very key and when I ask you who you are, be willing to also look at how you choose to word it. Do not judge yourself if the wording is a less empowered wording. Congratulate yourself for catching it and honing in, and revising the nature of the statement of your decision.

Are you on your planet or your spacecraft?

Q: Are you on your planet or your spacecraft?

Elan: I am within my scout craft which is in a particular position in my orbital path. For me, right now it is day.

I miss speaking with you.

Q: I've really missed speaking with you. This is really enjoyable for me.

Elan: How about speaking with yourself?

Q: Alright.

Elan: That is what you are doing anyway.

Do we make soul agreements?

Q: I understand that when we come here as souls. We make a decision to lead a life and experience a life here.

Elan: [interrupts] May I say something?

Q: Yes

Elan: I would anyway. That decision is very, very, very general. It generally will not take the form of "I will do this thing in that place at that time," or "I will explore this very finite and specific issue."

Generally, the overall decision is "I will create, explore and experience the effects of a linear existence, although I am an all-knowing, infinite consciousness being that is simultaneously existing right now and knows it all. I will create the opportunity to impose a veil of forgetfulness on 99.99999999% of my knowingness. In this way I can have the joyful, unique experience of discovering, of exploring, of unexpected outcomes all of which do not inherently have relevance to an infinite, all-knowing, all-seeing frame of consciousness."

So fundamentally, generally, foundationally, that decision is to take advantage of what this reality affords you.

Do proceed.

Q: Right. So, in the decision of coming here and experiencing life, we also come with an assortment of agreements with ourselves and with other people. Is that correct?

Elan: You work that into your moment to moment decision.

Q: Right.

Elan: But you do not need to. That is only one way to look at it and is also completely valid. But in the moment that you shift your decision, if that new decision is irrelevant to all of that so-called "exploration," it will no longer have any relevance to you.

In other words, those agreements are very loose, they do not "bind you." They do not determine your outcome in any way, other than when they are worked into the decision that you make.

Q: Well, it is a bit of a paradox, because I think that these agreements are with other people or other souls.

Elan: That is your decision and with it you will achieve that effect.

Q: Well, yeah and we recreate, moment to moment, and we are in control. Nothing's in stone, right? I guess what I'm saying is that it's a bit of a paradox because it seems like we can have control over each little new moment we create, yet at the same time we have these agreements that need to be fulfilled.

Elan: What is your definition of "control?" Does it mean a rigid, absolutely "predictable" outcome?

Q: No.

Elan: For a rigid, absolutely predictable outcome is not utilizing the spirit of the "joy of discovery" that this reality affords you.

What I am saying is that if you say, "no," as you just did, and allow unpredictable and joyous outcomes that definition, then it does not run contrary to allowing your perception, and therefore your decision, of agreements to play out.

Does that make sense?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Alright, proceed.

Q: I'd like to get to the specifics that relate to my life. I'm divorced and have two children. They just relocated to California. I'm wondering about my agreement with them because it's a pretty major move.

Elan: May I ask you a question?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Close your eyes assume that your children physically moving is extraneous and an interruption in your process. Imagine they are not part of your life.

Are you doing that?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Explain how you feel. Describe.

Q: It feels out of line, out of whack. It doesn't seem like it flows.

Elan: Be more specific. Is it not emotionally jarring?

Q: Yes! It's a bump in the road.

Elan: Is it "intense?" Is it "negative?" Do you not express fear and anger and distrust?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Alright, you can stop. Are your eyes still closed? Alright. Now assume for a moment that the absolute most beneficial way that you can create the relationship that you absolutely prefer with your children can only be achieved by this move. Also assume that this is playing out the perfect timing. Are you doing that?

Q: Yes, I am.

Elan: How does that feel?

Q: It feels so great and it's refreshing. I've approached it that way, and yes, when I do, it feels good.

Elan: Well, you have gone nowhere and created two distinct sets of emotions. I thank you for illustrating the topic at hand and showing how you can shift your decision. A shift in decision that comes along with a shift in emotion, a shift in thinking, ultimately cannot help to have a shift in action, and cannot help but have a shift in the result.

Now, both of those choices are true. And I do not say this to "befuddle" you, confuse you. I say this to let you see the extent to which they are both equal choices. And the only effect that you can possibly get out of them will depend on which one of them you assert and assume. When I say "assume," I mean that in the terms of "trying it on," assuming a posture, not as an assumption that something might be so, because it is so.

When you sat and made your first decision it became so; you felt that way, and you attracted the evidence. When you shifted your decision, simply because you entertained the idea that such a thing was possible, along came the supportive structure, the logic, and the evidence. When I say both are true, I truly mean it.

Therefore, the idea that this physical move is not only beneficial... Are you paying attention? But essential to your relationship being in its most positive light.

How does that feel? Does that take the pressure off, so to speak?

Q: Uh...

Elan: Are you fluctuating in your decision as we speak?

Q: No, it's just that's what I already came up with in the past week.

Elan: Well, when you really "come up with it," when you be it, it is far more purposeful, far more definite than the tone that you are now expressing it through.

Again, I'm not invalidating you, but simply pointing it out.

Sit up straight, make the statement. Do not be, as you say in your slang, "wishy-washy" about it. By the way, I find "wishy-washy" to be very interesting terminology. You have a fascinating language. Do you understand what I am saying?

Q: I do.

Elan: Is this useful or is it simply airy philosophy?

Q: No, no, no, you're speaking exactly what... I understand you completely.

Elan: Alright, so I would suggest if you are already doing it, that perhaps you are still not fully committed, or weren't until having this discussion, to truly accepting your decision and then allowing any opportunity, any external circumstance, any timing, any history, any future to support your decision, and to see through the "eyes" of that decision. Act as a person who has made that decision, rather than is waiting for the feedback to allow it to be okay to make that decision.

These are distinct gradations and nuances of decision. Decisions can be fully committed statements of who you are with complete purposefulness, or they can be, again, slightly "wishy-washy."

Q: I was wondering if you have anything to add to "I've created this situation now this allows me to do something."

Elan: Absolutely, and that would perhaps be a more constructive way to look at it.

Does it now excite you that it might be creating a new opportunity?

Q: Very much!

Elan: Alright. Then use that energy. And I assume, when you have positive expectations, that excitement drives you, motivates you, and inspires you. If you do not feel driven, inspired, and motivated then in that moment you are perhaps expressing either a different decision, or your decision is not a clear and well-defined one. In that case you can remind yourself of your decision, trust in that decision, that it is registered and that it is so.

With this understanding you can use that excitement to aid and assist you, use that so-called "energy level," to then support the actions of your new decision.

Q: Okay, and for a nice touch too, to also get into the emotion and feel the emotion that it's "bringing up."

Elan: You may find that your negative emotions can help you allow yourself to shift more quickly. In that case, experience them and allow them to be alright. "Alright, I understand that this negative emotion, fear, loneliness, abandonment, whatever, must be the result of a disempowered decision that I am making right now. By all means, I intend to have my decision be re-established but before I do, let me experience my creation, my negative emotions, and let me feel this fear, let me feel this apprehension. Although it may seem that it could overwhelm me, that it could kill me, it really can't."

Allowing yourself to experience it. It will actually support the reestablishment of your positive decision, because when you understand "I feel this fear, therefore the decision I am making now is that I am alone, that I am not loved, that I am not supported and when I make that decision, this is how I feel. Well, perhaps I do not desire to feel this way on a regular basis, so now I know, without any doubt that this negative decision feels this way and that reminds me, I would rather have this decision over here."

Q: [interrupts] Okay. STOP!

I don't think you understand. How can I interpret that through the eyes of a four-year-old or a six-year-old?! I'm not so much worried about me and my feeling bad because I know I can take care of myself, but I'm worried about... I mean can they take care of themselves without me? Can they handle not having me in their life? Can I maybe use my power to create a little bit more security and love on their behalf?

[quiet as he awaits Elan's response]

Do you understand what I am saying?

Elan: Yes, I'm simply waiting for you to tell me to "go," since you told me to stop.

Q: Oh, go.

Elan: Alright, goodbye.

[Elan pauses like he is finished]

Now I understand in regard to what you call the "parental unit" in your society, that it is generally your training to assume that you must be responsible for the individuals that you are a "guardian" of. Being responsible means choosing how one will act. However, you can only be responsible to them and not for them. This is true, regardless if they are four years old or one hundred and four years old.

In other words, exploring the ramifications of what they are going through in terms of taking responsibility for it, does not put you in the most empowered position to have your decision have an impact in their lives. In linear reality, actions are the way you express your choices and create your reality, and you cannot control the actions another individual will take. You cannot create their reality and you will only frustrate yourself.

What they are going through is what they are going through. If the opportunity arises to dialogue with that, by all means, you can clarify your understanding of what they are going through, but truly the example that you provide is the largest service. That is how you are being responsible to them rather than for them.

Although they do not have sovereignty, you need not concern yourself with this. You may reassure them that on some level they are participating in this timing for a reason. If they wish to understand the reason, by all means, they can explore it, and if not, well, your children have a tendency to begin to engage themselves in other things quite quickly.

So, are you willing to be responsible to those individuals rather than for them?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Does that not then allow you to feel more whole and therefore effective?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Congratulations! Now you can go.

How do I deal with arguing?

Q: Okay, about decisions. Say we've made a decision and we're living it just fine, but there are other people in the world that we have to interact with.

Elan: Ah! The "other person" excuse. Now what you are sharing with me is something that have you "built into" your decision, a supposition that you can experience, that other people may not be harmonious with you. But you also have the option to assume that anyone else's process is "synchronous" to your own.

You can shift your decision in this way, and you will find that your perception of other individuals will change so drastically that they will appear to actually change. If your decision consciously includes an allowance that all others' decisions would never be able to interfere with your own and that they can only be synergistic with your own, then their process will never seem to interfere with you. You will not choose to interpret any aspect or result of their process as an interference or an interruption.

Do proceed. Does that answer the question?

Q: Ah, well, that's "pretty good," but what about...

Elan: [interrupts] Oh. Only "pretty" good?

Q: What about, you know, when other people have made decisions or believe the things that are kind of opposite?

Elan: Well, they will experience that result regardless of you and your decision anyway, but that does not mean that it needs to be an interference in your process.

Can you understand that if you see something in another that seems to run contrary to your decision that simply allows you in no uncertain terms to remember what your decision is and therefore it is a service? It has assisted you in realigning to your decision.

Now when you look at it that way your attitude toward them changes; your action toward them changes. Perhaps you'll thank them, rather than forsake them. Naturally, their response will have to change as well, and therefore you have the same set of individuals, one different approach, entirely different outcome.

Q: [slowly] Yes.

Elan: You sound hesitant.

Q: No, I was just imagining actually thanking someone for arguing with me.

Elan: Well, alright. Do you, in your statement of who you are, and fear not, I will ask you "who you are" choose to express yourself as argumentative?

Q: No.

Elan: Is an argument only something perpetuated by more than one individual? I will answer that. Yes.

Q: Yes.

Elan: Therefore, can an "argument" continue to take place with only one person?

Q: Well, sometimes it seems like it.

Elan: Absolutely, but that would not affect you, and in fact may be quite humorous.

Q: I can see that.

Elan: Now the idea is this, what feels better to you--remembering who you are, needing to be right, or thanking someone for assisting you to realign to who you are? Which feels more natural?

Q: Thanking them and just reminding myself not to get involved in, you know, reminding myself to be who I want to be and not be them.

Elan: Doesn't that feel different? Doesn't that still allow another individual to have their process and validate their process? Can you make your perception of the situation reinforce your new decision? Couldn't you "make a case," as you say, for actually experiencing gratitude toward that individual for reminding you?

Is it really that difficult to picture yourself thanking the individual? Now that it has been introduced to you, isn't it actually an intriguing option?

Q: Well, I'll probably try it.

Elan: Ah, if you "try it," then you may get a result, but if you do it, you will get a result. "Trying" is one step removed from doing. It is doing, with a built-in allowance that you may fail. All the trying is not doing the thing, simply the doing of trying.

Now, in light of that, are you going to try, or simply understand truly, foundationally, fundamentally that that individual, no matter what their process is, serves you? You have attracted them. Can you find it within yourself to have gratitude and thank them for it?

Q: Thank you, thank you. Well not, you know, not in a bad way, thank you.

Elan: And thank you. "Good, thank you." Very creative! Understood. Do you understand what I am saying, and can you use this?

Q: Definitely. Thank you.

Elan: Enjoy! Understand that this is not the approach that you have formerly taken: gratitude, alignment, thankfulness, and using everything to support your decision.

You are now embarking on something new, different, exciting, and integrative. And you can only get a corresponding new, exciting, and integrated result.

Also, I would imagine, if you are beginning to really accept this facet of yourself, that it would be somewhat exciting, and perhaps you will look forward to the next opportunity to not participate in an argument. Perhaps you will find yourself disappointed "Uh! He's not arguing with me. How can I align?" Fear not, you are still aligned. But are you getting my point?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Thank you. Is that all?

Q: Yes, that's all, Thank you.

Elan: That was quite a lengthy discussion. However, you don't get away that easy. Who are you?

Q: Um.. I... okay.

Elan: How do you spell that? U... M...?

Q: I am a person who does what feels best at any moment and--okay, now I'm a person who remembers who I am and doesn't get led astray as easily at all.

Elan: Perhaps if you word it in the positive with something like "I will remain focused," rather than that you do not "go astray." "Not go astray" still puts emphasis and focus on "going astray." Remaining focused keeps you focused.

Q: I remain focused.

Elan: Alright, I thank you for the gift that you have shared, not only with me, not only with yourself but with everyone else who created the reflection that you just have contributed. Thank you.

Who are you?

Q: You like to remind us that we can choose who we want to be by asking the question "Who are you?" So, I am going to ask you, who are you?

Elan: Ah, brings to mind your saying, "turnabout is fair play!" I thank you! I am having fun with you. Allow me to simply say...

Q: [interrupts] That's what I was going to say!

Elan: Ah! Alright, then allow me to say to you "well put." By the way, if the channel laughed, literally, there could be a momentary break in the connection. I will not go into the mechanics of this now, so simply accept that.

While there may seem to be a consistent demeanor within what the channel, that we do laugh, revel, and enjoy these interactions. Allow me to thank you for sharing that.

[This question is answered in the book Hello!]

What can we do about world problems?

Q: Often I hear people talking about bad things that are going to happen in the world like economic problems, inner city problems, health crises, and environmental problems. They talk about these things that are coming as though they are external, not under their control, and as though they are inevitable. They are clearly not looking forward to these things.

Elan: And they experience them in exactly that way. Those outcomes are built into their decision. There is no one "the future." There is an infinite number of probable futures, and everyone gets to experience the results of their decisions without disturbing anyone else.

Q: Precisely. It seems fair to say that there's an infinite number of possible realities. We all experience our own subjective reality reflected back to us by the people around us. However, there's also an apparency that many of us are in agreement as to "what's so" and we experience a reality that has many common elements.

Elan: Which seem similar, although it is only, truly, an agreement apparency. But do proceed.

Q: Exactly! The assumption, however, on the part of many, is that in fact we're all within a reality with specific parameters and there's very little flexibility.

Elan: Absolutely. That assumption is made by many, but not all.

Q: You know however, it's obvious that we're never going to experience anything other than what everyone's always experienced. If, one by one, we don't take responsibility to go outside the paradigm, push the bubble back a little bit, and create things in a way that we prefer.

Elan: Or recreate the bubble all together.

Q: Exactly.

Elan: Rather than pushing against it.

Q: You know, it's that these things that we perceive, like "earth changes" and "economic shifts" and the like from retrospect or from the viewpoint of the future looking back on it, we realize how it was absolutely perfect the way that these things occurred. And that, in fact, rather than being the catastrophes that we thought they would be, they did in fact facilitate the transformation that we're all saying we want to experience.

Elan: I thank you for noticing.

Q: And that's who I am. I'm a stand for the possibilities.

Elan: Alright, I already knew who you were, but thank you.

Q: Thank you and it's good to be visiting with you.

I don't like sitting on the fence...

Q: I've been sitting on the fence.

Elan: Does it hurt by the way?

Q: My butt's definitely getting a little bit sore, and it's ready to make the jump or the leap.

Elan: Alright. No more "butts." Simply because you say so.

Q: And I definitely do thank you by the way for bringing this to my attention. It's definitely been a burning issue for me in the past three weeks.

Elan: That did not need to be as you say, "so long winded," however there are so many things to discuss.

Q: There sure are. I've decided that I like the view on top of the fence though.

Elan: You may sit there as long as you wish, but as you say, you may wish to understand that, I will be quite colloquial, you may not wish to "bitch" while you are sitting. Either sit and enjoy the view or get off the fence.

Q: Okay.

Elan: Now we did not mean to offend anyone who might find that verbosity offensive. Simply utilizing what's available through the channel.

Q: Thank you channel.

Elan: No offense to the channel as well.

Q: That's quite an interpretation on his part. But we've been talking about that.

Elan: So, either enjoy the view or jump down. You can always get back up. You will not lose the fence, I assure you. The fact is, once again, the in between state between the trust and the action, will sometimes give you the best view before you act. But then again, simply continuing to sit there can be a bit painful.

Q: Yes.

Elan: In terms of that you are resisting the movement of your reality.

Q: Absolutely. I know that I'm coming to terms with that trust. That's what I'm doing. I'm trusting my timing because, it's a little painful, but nonetheless I'm trusting the timing,

Elan: Alright "coming to terms"—so, "is it happening?" So, when will it occur? When will you decide in a given moment "now?" For what you are saying and how you are speaking implies "later?"

Q: Okay. That's my next question.

Elan: Alright.

Q: This is my question...

Elan: [interrupts] May I ask you a question?

Q: No.

Elan: Alright.

Q: You know what I'm going to ask. Go ahead. You can ask, but...

Elan: [interrupts] If you were already the person that you desire to be, would your actions be different--“yes” or “no”, no “ums”?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Alright. You are that person. Get moving. See you later. That is how simple it is. And I will allow you to look at that.

Q: Let me ask my question.

Elan: Alright.

Q: In contrast, if you act on something that excites you out of integrity and compare it to doing something that doesn't quite excite you but is in your integrity, is there a comparison or contrast there?

Elan: Well, both are settling for less than who you are, and so will have varying degrees of effect. In any case they will still fall short of what you truly desire.

Q: Okay, because I've been doing my work. It feels really good to make the money, and it's exciting to me to pay my bills.

Elan: Alright, but you are assuming, through the way you are speaking, that being completely who you are, would not pay the bills?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Why?

Q: Because....

Elan: Why do you rigidly hold on to this belief and clench it?

Q: [agitated] It's our society... it's too much.

Elan: [exaggerating] "It's the society." Alright. What other excuses can you come up with?

Q: Society is a jail. Do you know what I mean?

Elan: Are you going to lock yourself up understanding that the key is in your own pocket, by blaming the society and externalizing your power? You can use society as an excuse. It is available, of course. It is the society if you say so. That is the point. But do you wish it to be? I assume "no."

Q: No.

Elan: Do you want it to be? I assume "No." Do you want to find excuses? I assume "No." So, you are the person you desire to be. Trust it, act that way, and see what happens.

Q: I definitely have trust issues. It's fear, too, I guess. I'm coming to terms with that.

Elan: Alright, but when you say it is a trust issue, you are trusting. It is not doubt, it is an infinite trust that the thing you don't prefer is most likely.

Q: I've done it. I've... um...

Elan: You've done what?

Q: I- I don't want to say "try," but I had the experience of what we're saying here.

Elan: Which is what?

Q: I had a negative effect. Which is...

Elan: You have not done what we are speaking of here and gotten a negative effect from it. You have alternately fluctuated and peppered your soup and perhaps are complaining about the pepper but it was not from doing an exciting thing with integrity that you got a negative effect. Unless you say so, and if you absolutely insist that is the case, that is so.

Q: Right. Okay. Because doing my work is fulfilling my integrity, but I'm not excited about it. I'm also building a house right now, and that's really fun. The other day, however, I was a bag of bones. I want more time to work on this house-building project.

Elan: How can you do the exciting thing if you fill the so called "moments" with the things that don't excite you? There's no time left.

Q: That's right.

Elan: So, you're making your choice. You're trusting your choice. You're acting through your trust. You're creating the effect.

Q: I don't want to do the work I'm doing. Are you suggesting that I should stop and go a week or two without any money? I don't know.

Elan: You're adjusting from one thing to another.

Q: This is just physical reality.

Elan: You are operating on an assumption flawlessly. So, I'm not going to argue with you because you are absolutely correct with that assumption. You will continue to get that effect. But it is not society. It is your assumption.

Do you understand the distinction?

Q: I do, but...

Elan: No "buts."

Q: No, no, no. That's what I said. No more buts.

Elan: Then you said it.

Q: I guess I'm shifting my perspective on this because I want to stay grounded and I spent the last year with my head in the clouds, and now I'm grounded....

Elan: "Grounded" is simply choosing from what's available and doing that thing. That is grounded. That is being physical. That is moving things around within your reality. That is "off the fence." That is off the fence and in the action phase. You are grounded by definition. What you are speaking about with "head in the clouds" without being grounded, without feet on the ground, is thinking about it, imagining it, wishing it were so and then acting completely opposite. You're grounding yourself, but you're grounding yourself to the thing that you say you don't prefer.

Q: So being a builder, it's something I come to terms with. I- I...

Elan: "Come to terms"? Does that mean "settle for"?

Q: Yeah. But I know it excites me. There's a reason why I'm a builder in this life.

Elan: Alright, what is the reason? I assume if you are going to say, "there is a reason," that the reason is not to be a builder and build things that make you miserable.

Q: No.

Elan: Or to attract situations and jobs that make you miserable. Yes, that is one way to express your "buildership," if there is such a word. But that is not the way you desire to express it. So, clarify your intention, and clarify your vision. To decide who you prefer to be, you clarify who you prefer to be. Sit down with yourself. How do you prefer to build? See yourself building. Feel the joy and see how you are building, what you are building. There is something there you have not even considered.

Q: Yeah. Is there more you can tell me?

Elan: Absolutely not. It's like me handing you all your Christmas presents and then unwrapping them for you. No. But I will give you the gift for you to unwrap.

You have fixated upon stopping and fencing it. Understand, "Alright, I know the building excites me. I know the way I am expressing it, at least partially, does not excite me. Some of the aspects of what I am doing do excite me. Therefore, let me consider them. Now. What else would excite me that I am not doing that I have not considered?" Open the door. Do you understand?

Q: As far as in the building?

Elan: That's what we are discussing, it goes across the board to any interest or excitement that you have, but you brought up the building, so we'll go with that.

Q: It has opened doors. It excites me to a level. It has... I've done it, like you said, for more than three days, and it did manifest something really surprising. It came out of nowhere. Somebody offered... I'm in a partnership perhaps to buy some land that is very affordable, to build a house, etc., etc. That will align up means for more money later.

Elan: My suggestion is simply this. Begin to explore a particular way to apply this forte, this strength of yours, in a way that you have not considered. For now. Stay with that if you wish. Alright?

Q: Yes.

Saying “I am abundant” doesn’t change anything.

Q: Even though I say “I believe I do not have to live with struggling, I choose abundance. I prefer abundance,” it feels like “magical” thinking, in that I’m not...

Elan: Well, that means on some level you don’t believe it is likely, and there perhaps is a belief that you can hone down on.

Q: I guess, translating that into action that I need to take, that’s where I need...

Elan: Simply by establishing your excitement in the moment and moving on it. When you do that, a momentum will begin behind the things that are representative of your new vibration.

But again, remember our definition of abundance is the ability to do what you need to do. Notice that that definition does not include money as being the only way to do it. Our suggestion would simply be to begin to act on what excites you, to begin exercise your ability in whatever way you can to do it. Do not insist it must be one way. Look around at what other ways you can get the same thing done and express that ability.

Be willing to only do what excites you. There is an automatic support mechanism built into that from the universe which is more than willing to continue to provide all the support that you need to continue to be who you are.

The seeming lack of abundance, which is simply another form of abundance, is more from the hesitation in your action than the action of going for it.

Q: Okay. Let me explain a little bit more. Over the past several years I've had real financial difficulties. I really didn't have a place to live and that lasted for some months.

Now, I realize that I'm creating these situations and the lack, the feeling of lack, especially the lack of money, and I would like your help in maybe just taking another step with this as I look at how I am... I want to change this.

Elan: Alright. Well, first of all, have you been allowing your abundance to come in other forms?

Q: Um... I've heard that suggestion of yours.

Elan: We are speaking about you using it. Your willingness to do so, is a posture of unconditional acceptance. Take a posture of unconditional acceptance. The polarity of unconditionally acceptance and receptivity is matched by the universe as unconditional giving.

When you place rigid conditions, they are maintained from the other end. When the rigid condition is that "I will only allow the money to be the way to deliver" this methodology, then that's what you get or don't get as fast as you wish.

When you allow your definition to expand and allow it to deliver in many ways, then you begin to create an unconditional acceptance which is matched with many coincidences, seemingly delivering beyond your expectancy. That is step one.

Step two, would be to call your attention to whatever limiting beliefs you contain about individuals who already have money. For if they are interpreted by you in a negative way, there is the built-in contradiction of beliefs, whereby, you want something, but you may feel the cost of getting it would be the cost of yourself or your integrity. That is the next step. Is that clear?

Q: Yes, that's clear

Elan: You're blushing.

Q: I'm thinking about what you're saying. Am I blushing? Oh.

At a previous session we spoke about how I didn't like creating and mailing brochures for my new business. It all felt yucky and overwhelming to me. After our talk, the woman next to me volunteered to do some mailings for me, and in fact she did do them, and I really like her, and I think she's really intelligent and was a real gift at that point.

Elan: Well, instant manifestation. You will often begin to see more of this. But it takes boldly putting it out there, which you did. Now you can see how quickly the universe delivers.

Q: Um... I feel like you've had a great part in that. Since I feel like you stimulated that.

Elan: Well, a great part, perhaps, meaning as an act four.

Q: Thank you very much for your part. So, I need to... I'm going to... I forgot what the first step is...

Elan: Allowing your abundance to come in whatever way, no matter what. That will still enable you to do what you need to do. Exercising your ability to do what you need to when you need to do it, without rigidly insisting it, must come in monetary form. Number two is to assess how you feel and the negative feelings you sometimes create about what money does to one, and how with one with money then acts.

Q: Um...

Elan: That will keep you busy.

Q: Undoubtedly.

Focusing on abundance isn't working.

Q: Going to back to what you were talking about before, focusing on abundance, I have tried to make the decision to focus on abundance...

Elan: Alright, let's start there. "Try to focus, to make a decision." "Tried to focus." That's several times removed from simply focusing. Now your wording is tell-tale. Pay attention to it.

You don't need to judge yourself for having that understanding. Use it. The question is, when you do focus on abundance, how are you focusing on it?

Q: Probably in my head.

Elan: How are you stating it?

Q: I am an abundant being, and I will manifest abundance.

Elan: Alright. When will you? For you must understand that if that is how you word it, that is what you will get.

Q: Well, maybe that's why I'm not manifesting.

Elan: The idea is that you are already abundant. You already have what you need when you need it. Now that you realize that, you need not use lack of abundance as an excuse to not express yourself.

When you begin to get into the movement and action of consciously expressing yourself according to preference in a focused way, you perform different actions than you would've otherwise. These actions have results. Some of those results will reinforce your ability to perform those actions through various forms of abundance.

Sometimes this will be directly in what you call “monetary exchange,” but other times in other types of exchange that still have the same effect of allowing you to continue to be who you are effortlessly and naturally.

Perhaps you can begin to look at it from that holistic point of view. Is that slightly different?

Q: It's slightly different.

Elan: Alright.

Q: Then I find that there are things in my environment that appear to be not abundant.

Elan: Alright, but are there also not things that at the same time are amazingly positively abundant?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Alright. And this is what we are discussing. It is an excellent example. At that juncture you have the ability to choose where your attention lies. One will prove in no uncertain terms that this stuff works, another will seem to be contrary and against it. And it will be your choice completely as to which to focus on.

If you focus on what is still isn't happening, that is what you will continue to create, for that is the focus. “Still not happening. Still not happening. Can't pay this. Can't pay that.”

If you turn around and say, “Alright. It appears as though I cannot pay this. I intend to pay this, and it is my intention to be able to pay these things as they come in,” to use one example. Look at where you are already expressing your abundance. You shift your approach and then your actions remain consistent with the statement of positive abundance.

If you use “I can’t pay that” as evidence of negative abundance, your demeanor changes, your focus changes, your action changes, and it reinforces the lack of abundance. Do you understand?

Q: Yes.

Elan: So, it is simply a matter of focus. And when you say, “I can’t pay this,” you are very focused.

Q: I am.

Elan: Therefore, you can use that to remind yourself, “Ah! Look what I’m focusing on. It’s very blatant. It’s very easy to focus on. But that is not who I choose to be. And therefore, I will first jumpstart my own process by consciously seeking where I have a blatant, no doubt about it evidence of abundance.”

Use that approach and you will immediately see a change across the board. What you are creating now and experiencing is the result of shifting your focus back and forth, like windshield wipers in your life.

Is this approach too simple?

Q: It’s simple.

Elan: Alright.

Q: It makes sense.

Elan: In applying it, you are being an abundant person. That is the whole difference. Abundance is something you already contain. There is a distinct difference in saying “I am abundant. I can continue to do the things that are representative of who I am,” than in saying the converse, “I am almost abundant. I will be abundant. I am becoming abundant" --which is distinct from already being it.

Keep it in the moment. You are already abundant. There is nowhere to get. Now go and your job is to see all the different examples of how you are abundant, and you will. Those examples will bring up new opportunities because now you're focused on them.

The new opportunities will bring up new opportunities to act. The new actions that you would not have done with the old focus will create more of a perpetuation of the obvious abundance around you, all by having done nothing but shift your focus and act accordingly.

I want to be an actress.

Q: I have a very complicated question and I'm going to try to make it as simple as possible.

Elan: More complexity. I welcome it.

Q: [laughing] Oh good!

Elan: Understand no matter how complex the question, the answer is generally quite simple. And complexity is just the richness, but the mechanism is simplicity itself.

Proceed

Q: I decided last year to go for my passion, which is to be an actress and dancer.

Elan: Congratulations!

Q: Thank you. But at the same time, I'm working for a major corporation and, while I was working full-time, I took every dollar I had and all my energies and focused it into pursuing the arts. And...

Elan: Ah! Pursuing? It is getting away from you?

Q: [laughter] Okay. Okay.

Elan: Listen to your wording to aide yourself in realigning to your preference and then proceed.

Q: Okay. I don't know how to say this now. Anyway...

Elan: Just say it.

Q: Okay. I went for this whole profession, and I absolutely loved what I was doing, and then my money ran out. I was robbed twice. My boyfriend got very sick, almost died. Everything that was in my life just sort of stopped, and I felt like the universe... I had put my whole financial self on the line and took the risk...

Elan: Ah! "On the line." So, there was an underlying assumption that there was a tight rope to be walked. Yes?

Q: Yeah. Definitely.

Elan: I simply mention this because the flavor of that would come out in your decision, your trust, and your action. Now, there is the notion of deciding to be the actress whose life simply works and flows effortlessly. That is also an option. And that brings different dynamics. But do proceed.

Q: Well in the midst of all this, I decided to start my own business to sort of get out of the corporate situation and to have more time and flexibility to support the acting. My business took off quite well and I find that I'm, um, very excited about it. It's literally teaching people to follow their excitement. As I teach it, I say, "Well I'm excited about doing this, but I'm not pursuing what I really want to be doing."

Elan: So, in other words, in creating this dynamic with such a tight rope you attract other individuals, assist them, and watch that it really works for others.

Q: Oh. Is that what I do?

Elan: Well, I am asking you. Is that not one way to define it? How much proof will you require externally before you simply decide to do that thing yourself?

Now again, I suggest that you begin by redefining your decision. Who is it exactly that you choose to be? Do you choose to be an actress at all costs? Or do you choose to be an actress effortlessly and effervescently because it is who you choose to be. There is a distinction right there to begin with.

Secondly, do you require external proof that excitement really works with integrity, and can you see that this is one of the truths that exists within you?

Q: Are you asking me that as a question?

Elan: It's up to you.

Q: Um...I guess...I think you're right about the distinction. My mind is always saying, "Someday I'm going to be this," or I say, "Yes, I'm a dancer and an actress, but I haven't had the time or energy to dance or act because I've been pursuing this other business which is going well."

Do I stop doing the other business and just focus on ...?

Elan: Well, not necessarily. Your excitement may take many forms. But the idea is not so much telling others that you are an actress but accepting it yourself.

That is where, at least in the instance that you provided, you have not fully committed to yourself. "I will be an actress based upon an external criterion," rather than "I am an actress; now I will allow the reality to find me." And the reality will find an actress because there are no jobs for someone who will be an actress.

Q: [laughing] Oh. So, what you're saying...

Elan: Get off the fence.

Q: [laughing] Uh. Yeah. Okay.

Elan: Do you understand the distinction? I do not wish to provide an elaborate set of semantics and create complexity. I wish to narrow it down and simplify that a slight shift in perspective creates a reality around it and allows you to reinforce the expression of the effortless actress, and there is no effort to be who you are. It is quite an effort, however, to continually become something you are not.

Q: That's so true.

Elan: You are an actress.

Q: [laughing] I am?

Elan: Do you understand even what you just said to me? Does that show you where you are still refusing to be an actress?

Q: Yes.

Elan: You are holding on to it. There is nothing in that sense happening to you. You are holding onto it. You are an actress. Are you not?

Q: Yes, I am.

Elan: Getting there. One moment. Are you sitting up straight?

Q: No.

Elan: Do so, please? If you wish. Take a deep breath. An actress has a certain posture--assume that posture, the posture that you imagine an actress would have. Eyes closed if you wish. It's up to you. Someone who assumes that role in your society projects from themselves in a particular way that embodies conviction that they have become someone else. Okay?

Q: Yes.

Elan: So, for now, act like you're an actress. Sit up straight and say--you are auditioning for me by the way right now--"I am an actress," and have me believe it.

Q: I am an actress. I think.

[much laughter]

Elan: You are absolutely going to get the job of becoming an actress.

[much laughter]

Do you have an investment in not being an actress?

Q: I... you know... I really think I might only because I've always been told that if you're an actress then "you're frivolous" ...

Elan: Ah!

Q: or "you're not helping people" or "you're never gonna survive" ...

Elan: Ah!

Q: "You're gonna be bankrupt."

Elan: Alright. Alright. All that is true. All of it. But so is the fact that you can be an actress and contribute to society; you can create abundance and share that abundance to make the world a better place. Both are true. You need not assume that one is true and that the other is false, unless you wish.

Now, sit up straight and understand that when you say to me, "I am an actress," you are the type of actress you desire to be.

Yes, that other type of actress exists, but as you say “big deal.” That’s not the type you wish to be, is it?

Q: No.

Elan: Can you imagine an actress that is positively abundant and that contributes through her training and conviction and creativity to the enhancement of mankind and womankind.

Can you imagine that?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Alright. Audition for me once again being that actress and say, “I am an actress.”

Q: I am an actress.

Elan: How does that feel?

Q: Much better.

Elan: Different from “I am an actress. I think?”

[much laughter]

Q: Yeah.

Elan: Alright. That is what I mean by when you choose to express a belief, be very clear about the timing, be very clear about how you’ve already defined it, acknowledge the belief that you have already expressed, and then clearly define the belief you wish to express and express it.

As I begin by saying, expressing a belief leads to an emotion. It feels better, doesn’t it?

Q: It feels much better. Can I ask you...

Elan: Notice that you have not left your chair, and yet you have created both sets of emotions. When you said, "I am actress. I think," how did that feel?

Q: Very insecure.

Elan: You changed. You transformed your emotions through awareness and through choice.

Q: Yes.

Elan: Therefore, if you continue to be the actress you prefer, you will feel this more and more, and you will think differently because that is not a sedative, hesitant presentation. Plus, you cannot help but act differently simply because you say so, because it is a reflection of your choice, and you trust in that choice. Okay?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Now, see what happens.

Q: With the financial situation, in order to... I'm not gonna use that word again... okay... in order to be an actress in the biggest and best sense of the word, I need more training.

Elan: Ah! Another definition.

Do you really? Answer yes or no? Is it both? Do you not already know everything you need to be the actress you need to be right now and by being that actress should a role or situation come along that requires more training, wouldn't that actress just attract it without having go after it? Is that just yet another excuse of why you are not yet an actress?

Q: Yes. [laughing]

Elan: Alright. You are already an actress. You have all of the tools you need for the first role that will come along. If you choose to believe it, express it as a belief, and act according to that belief.

Q: Okay.

Elan: Is that too complex?

Q: No, actually, that clarified a lot.

Elan: Does it feel different now still?

Q: Yeah, it does feel different.

Elan: Each time you feel insecure understand, "Alright, Alright, Alright, in this moment I am expressing the becoming actress part of me. Alright. Fine. I couldn't possibly make another decision unless I acknowledge what I am doing."

Sit yourself up straight. Audition for yourself. "I am an actress." Feel that feeling. Stand up. Move about. And you will change everything.

But remember the definition of the type of actress you desire is an abundant actress. You have built into your definition the starvation factor.

Q: [laughing] You're right. You're right. Now as far as the business is concerned, you're saying I should...

Elan: The business excites you and it will continue to be available as an option. So, when that is the most exciting option by all means go about it. The actress attracts whatever she attracts and may attract many different things that will enrich her life, and what excites you in that moment, though it may have nothing to do with acting, makes you no less an actress but part of the very training you are requesting, through life, and through experience.

Q: I have a corporate job that I can leave.

Elan: That is up to you.

[laughing]

Are you running from it, or are you too busy for it?

Q: Too busy for it.

Elan: Alright. That is far different.

How do I deal with obstacles?

Q: I've heard, or I've been told, if you're trying to do something, and I know I'm using a lot of words here, I'm just going to put it out...

Elan: Alright, simply "put it out."

Q: Thank you. If you're intending to do something and you come up against a lot of conflict then it's a challenge through which you're sharpening and strengthening yourself and that in the process of overcoming it, or enduring through that regardless of the difficulty, you are strengthening and evolving in that way.

Now, according to what I understood you to be saying, if there is difficulty with something I want to be doing, the best thing is to let it go, because that's an indication that it's not in alignment with my highest good and evolution and my true essence?

Elan: In a sense, but allow us to remind you this comes back to excitement. There are two, probably more, but for the purposes of this discussion, two concepts of excitement. There is the overall most exciting thing, and the most exciting thing in any given moment from the choices available that you can act upon.

If you find something difficult there are few reasons. First, you may not be choosing from what is available what truly excites you. Second, you may be moving out of some self-imposed set of obligations. Or, lastly, you are simply defining and labeling something that is of service to you as quite extraneous and that closes your vision to be able to see why you created it. Does this help?

Q: Somewhat.

Elan: If not, can you ask another question?

Q: Thank you. So then if you endeavor to do something and you are having a lot of difficulty and resistance and conflict in getting it, and it's not coming; it's not happening; it's a struggle...

Elan: Then perhaps you are fixated upon choosing what is not immediately available. Remember, when the most exciting thing is something you can't do anything about right now, the quickest way to get there is to do from what is available what excites you.

Now the thing that you are excited to do right now may seem to have nothing to do with the most exciting thing, but the fact that it excites you is your indication that it does. All things that excite you are all part of one excitement, one definition of who you are.

Even if they do not seem situationally, circumstantially to be linearly related, they are. They are steppingstones, even though one stone does not lead directly to the next, it still is your best step eventually get to that stone down the way. Is that clear?

Q: Yes. Thank you.

Elan: If you find difficulty, understand that it is not tiring to do what excites you. It is not effort-ful to do the things that are representative of who you are. If you are experiencing fatigue, if you are experiencing even pain, mental, emotional, or physical, it is from the resistance of your ecstasy, resisting from what's available, doing what excites you. That is very tiring and laborious.

Q: Okay. Thank you.

Elan: And to you.

I feel inadequate due to my mother.

Q: What I want to ask you about is a book that I just read by Alice Miller, called The Drama of the Gifted Child. It pointed out to me the source of belief systems that interfere with my creating a life of preference. What this book said was that when a parent who, for whatever reason, sends signal to the child that certain portions of them are not acceptable, then the child grows up feeling that only part of them is okay. I feel that way. I feel that I am in some ways flawed or not okay, or not good enough.

Elan: Only when you perpetuate it. Now that you have some insight into the mechanism, you can understand that this is not something “stored” in your cells that you’re stuck with. That is a perception, and there is some accuracy to the mechanism that you read about. However, that is not the only way you can look at it nor is that the only explanation.

Each time you feel it, by definition in that moment you are recreating it. You are matching it.

In other words, in any moment there are an infinite number of things that you can think about, that you can focus on, and that you are aware of, but they do not all evoke what you call “a response” from you. When you have a response, something is evoked within you, and in that moment, you are matching that.

You can always ground yourself back into that moment and ask yourself, “Alright. What am I perpetuating right now?” And generally, you will find in even asking yourself that question that three quarters, if not all, of those beliefs no longer apply to you. That is simply a matter of dialoguing.

Q: Okay. I do... I think that I work really hard in trying to identify what beliefs don't serve me and often I'll bring....

Elan: By the way, I will not allow it to slip by that you “have worked very hard at trying.”

Q: Sorry.

Elan: Do not apologize. But the point is exactly what you are doing. When you word it that way, you continue to you reflect to yourself, “I am still trying. I am still not 100% diving in.”

Q: By “try” do you mean... when I say “try,” it’s like a belief that I can’t succeed?

Elan: Well, you are not even trying. You are “working on trying.” You are one step removed from even trying. So, push that all aside, and do it. Period. It sounds like semantics. “Sounds like Elan is being a cosmic wise guy again.” And you can interpret it that way if you wish, but it is literal as well.

Q: “Try” reflects a belief that I can’t succeed?

Elan: “Try” reflects an incomplete commitment. It reflects incomplete conviction. Therefore, fully commit. Then fully act with full commitment and full conviction. And that little slight shift is that stump that you are creating.

Q: Okay. Let me give you an example...

Elan: Alright.

Q: I’m doing a consulting job right now that doesn’t really excite me; it’s not really exactly what I want to do, but I think I created it to give myself the time and money to do what I really like to do.

Elan: Well, while you're doing it, are you also then keeping your eyes very open for other opportunities that come along or are you so engrossed in the process itself that they are passing you by?

Q: Well, the process itself requires a lot of my time and attention.

Elan: That is why I am asking.

Q: One of my fears is that that might happen, and I don't want it to. I don't want to shut myself off from more exciting opportunities.

Elan: Then state to the universe, "I remain completely open," and do so, and that is all.

Q: Okay. There's still this job I have to spend many hours a day on to get it done because there's a timeline, a deadline.

Elan: Well, alright. I assume, then, that you mean that there is date set for the completion of the work?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Then what will you do? Perhaps that is more the point.

Q: You mean after the completion? Oh. Yeah, something more exciting.

Elan: Alright.

Q: Okay, the...

Elan: Okay. So, you understand that you have chosen this situation and that perhaps you have slightly sold yourself short of your excitement, plus you entered into agreements and have exchanged integrity with others. Are you willing to entertain the thought that within the foundation that you have laid down are some exciting things? Are you willing to begin to work within your structure and the things that excite you within it?

Q: Well, I see what you're saying and.... the... the thing is there are many things I could do that excite me. I have a real sense that the world is changing very rapidly, and I want to look at and understand the big picture more before I pick any specific area to get involved in, like solar energy, or something like that. I want to pick the specific area before I get trapped or over-involved in that. Or even perhaps I want to write something on the world economy while integrating the concepts that you're talking about before I feel comfortable as to where I would fit in.

Elan: Well, that is one approach. Another approach is to simply to say, "Alright, here are my options, and this one excites me," and dive in. And then the other ones because they are representative of who you are will become more available as you are acting on the things that do excite you.

Remember to simply ground yourself to what is available, even within the agreements. Factor in your excitement. Do not "work on it" or "try" to do that, but simply do. Do it.

Q: It has gotten a little more exciting as I have gotten some positive feedback...

Elan: Well, as you honor what excites you from what is available, inevitably it will get much more exciting, not just a little.

Q: Okay, well, the example that I wanted to use was that I have to work on this one particular project during the day and I feel that I when I sit down to work on it, I start to get the belief that I'm going to be rejected, and that makes me want to eat cookies or watch TV.

Elan: In those moments is there someone there evaluating you? Yes or no.

Q: No.

Elan: Therefore, it is irrelevant to that moment and you are simply not reminding yourself of that. You are “futuring” it.

Q: I... I understand that and I....

Elan: What you are not understanding completely is that all you have to do and again I understand this sounds too simple to be true is, stop doing it. Stop it.

When you find yourself doing that, acknowledge it, and remind yourself “Alright. Can someone evaluate this right now? Well, obviously not. Then why am I thinking about what someone might think about this? It is not relevant to what I am doing. Alright. Well, I had this idea, I entertained it, and now I push it aside.” Then you will be re-grounded to what is available.

Q: I see how you... I know how you say that all beliefs are equal, and I know that I can choose to believe that “I will be rejected” and that “I won't be rejected.” If I were to work that up, I believe that I wouldn't get rejected. But it seems that the belief that “I will be rejected” is somehow more powerful or more compelling. I was thinking that perhaps because I had already experienced rejection that it somehow seems that belief is stronger.

Elan: Congratulations. You have just nailed it down. Now, is that what you prefer to continue to embody?

Q: Absolutely not, but...I need help getting away from it...

Elan: If you understand that all beliefs are equal, then you also understand you can equally act according to either belief. What you are not perhaps doing is calling forth the referential preferential you, your preferred self, in those circumstances. You are not clearly visualizing the you that you prefer to be.

Q: Okay, well, I have a hard....when I try to visualize... I can visualize the preferential me that I want to be: someone that loves myself, stands in the moment, looks around and loves what I create without feeling reservation, and someone who just dives in and experiences life.

The way I visualize myself I find I feel incomplete or...

Elan: You are not really doing what we are talking about. To use your example, you are sitting there writing your report. An idea occurs to you that in that moment that you may be rejected. Then you begin to create what you call "paralysis." Then you remind yourself, "One moment, this is not what I prefer. I certainly don't prefer to go eat cookies either. Therefore, who am I? Well, right now I am being a person that acts hesitantly because of the belief from rejection, but ultimately what I am doing is stopping what I am doing. I am hesitating.

"Now, the referential preferential me has these characteristics," that you have just so illustriously made. "What would that referential preferential me be doing sitting at this same desk thinking the way I am? It would understand that it has in that moment expressed a belief. It is now formulating, that if it were to express a new belief, it would continue writing the report." Then continue to write the report."

You are assuming that you are not that powerful. When you do that one single time, you have overcome much of what you have been discussing. You have complete power in the moment, but the action is the ultimate expression of what you believe. Nothing is stopping you from completing that report but you, your notions, and your beliefs.

Q: It just seems that I get overpowered by these feelings of rejection and I say, "Okay, I now want to work on this report. I don't want to go turn on the TV and eat cookies right now." And then I get up and turn on the TV and eat cookies. Do you know what I mean? It's almost like...

Elan: Then you are saying, "I understand what I do not want to do, and I am doing it." That is also your choice. That is also conscious creator-hood as well, but perhaps you are using it as an excuse to deny that this does work.

Q: Okay. Well.

Elan: The referential preferential you is not just a notion but a model for action. That is the true answer to your question. If you even did this just once, you could reverse your tendency, and show yourself, "Yes, I can write this report rather than watching television and eating the cookies, and still feel fulfilled."

Q: So you're saying, in the moment, that when I feel like I'm going to get up and eat cookies, but I don't want to...

Elan: Call up the referential preferential you and see what that you would do and do that.

Q: Like call someone or something like that?

Elan: Or take a walk or finish the report.

Q: Okay.

Elan: The referential preferential you might also determine that "What this is telling me is that in this moment I need a break. Therefore, my options are: I can watch TV and eat cookies, I can complete this report, I can call a friend, or I can go for a walk. Well, A and B do not excite me as much as C. I will call a friend."

"Ah! I'm done talking to my friend. Do I wish to do this report? Well, here are my other options, but none of them are very exciting. The report is actually the most exciting option." The report is now done.

The point is to trust and allow your reality to be what it is not what it “ought” to be.

Q: Okay. I will do that.

Elan: Alright.

I would like to have a relationship.

Q: Regarding women....I really feel that at some point I would like to be married and have children, um, but...

Elan: Why?

Q: Why? Because I love kids and I sense on some level that I would really enjoy being in partnership.

Elan: You have something to share, in that sense.

Q: Yeah. I would like to enjoy life with her and the child.

Elan: Proceed.

Q: The thing that blocks me, though, when I try to visualize myself being married to someone is that I can sometimes see the preferential me feeling grounded inside and letting life come from me choosing what I want and sharing my life with someone as an equal partner, but a lot of times what I get afraid of or what stops me is an alternative vision of my life that I often have. It is of me kind of standing there alone in the world and needing someone to come and take care of me, or complete me in some way, almost like needing a mother.

Elan: Those are choices. Those are the beliefs within you. As you have just stated, it would be inaccurate to believe one or the other. You believe both, and believing one gives you one reality, believing the other gives you another reality, believing both gives you a third reality, for you act both ways. Ultimately you only get the effect of either belief when you are acting like you believe it. So, it is always in the moment to cease the continuance of those actions call forth the preferential you and insert new actions according to preference. It would be inaccurate to say that "I no longer contain the belief I am needy.” You always contain all beliefs. So knowing that you contain them all and they are all equal then allows you to see that they are equal and that it is not a matter of getting rid of one belief and choosing another one, but that by focusing upon one the other is just simply out of your experiential reality. But it is not gone anywhere. Ultimately, though, what gives you the effect in your life is how you are acting. So, when you picture yourself standing alone, understand in that moment you are acting like that person. And if you will simply call up the preferred reality, plug in those actions, and begin to act that way, you will then feel that way.

Q: As soon as I visualize the weak me or the needy me... I’ve done it wrong or--

Elan: Well, that is the “weak needy” you doing that. But, in the next moment, you can simply shift your focus to the empowered you and have a little conversation. Your preference factors into it. There is no “life” in life unless you create that apparency.

Q: But it seems like every time I hear the disapproving parents, a voice in my head, I put myself down and say, “Oh...”

Elan: You buy into it. You buy into it.

Q: How do I get...It’s like...

Elan: First of all, understand that you are buying into it. “I am buying a bill of goods.” That, in and of itself, can shift the impact for it brings it back to you. If you are feeling that way, you are buying into that, and it is, simply, then a matter of realigning to preference. “Do I prefer to feel this way? No. Do I really only disapprove and dislike myself? No. What are the other ways I feel?” Call them up. Bring them up. Bring them forth. Then watch, feeling how the referential preferential you now acts. It hands you a new set of actions. The performance of the new set of actions gives you new results. And you no longer can say, "This keeps happening."

You are a sponge. You are absorbent. Trust that. And begin to understand that your power lies not in speculation, not in preparation, but in the moment that it occurs. When you feel most helpless, that is when you have the most power to change.

Q: Why do I continue to feel like the world isn't safe for me, like it's...

Elan: Because you have not fully embraced what I am saying. But now you are beginning to understand. When you feel the most vulnerable, you are displaying the most strength and showing yourself that you can handle anything. So, remind yourself of that when you do so that when you are berating yourself, you can toss a couple of compliments in there as well. Alright?

Q: Alright. I think I'm gonna get cooking.

Why do limiting beliefs persist?

Q: I very much desire to have a life of abundance and joy and filled with love. I've taken many steps in that direction by doing a lot of things and applying what I've learned from you. I would like to go a little bit further with it. One of the things I want to discuss is the persistence of old beliefs. And the situation that seems to be cropping up is procrastination in my consulting business...

Elan: [interrupts] Alright. Before you continue... "old belief," "new belief," "persistence"... Remember you contain all the beliefs. The new beliefs are just as persistent as the old. Those are options. Options. Options. Neither one of them controls you. You choose them. They may scream "I'm over here," but ultimately you decide that "I will express this belief, I will trust in the expression, I will act according to that."

By all means invite them to be persistent. A non-preferred belief which seems to present itself very strongly, very loudly, is one of the opportunities of alignment that we have been speaking of.

You always have the ability to consciously, choose the preferred belief, and perhaps even thank the other belief for giving you an extra option. This allows you to continue alignment.

Use your language to your advantage. Rather than saying, "I am not the old belief," decide and say, "I am the new belief." Whenever you state your decision in relationship to what you don't want or in contrast to your old belief, you actually include the old belief in your decision, because "the universe," which is actually you, has the tendency to ignore the "not" and just hear the statement. So rather than saying, "I am not this. I don't want this," say, "I am this. I do want this. I am this."

For example, rather than saying, "I do not procrastinate," you could perhaps say, "I am enjoying taking action."

From my perspective, these persistent old beliefs very conveniently for me fit into a topic we wish to share which is about opportunities for alignment.

Thank you.

Is it possible to get younger and healthier?

Q: The last few months I've felt as though I might be getting younger mentally and physically. Is that possible?

Elan: Well, you tell me.

Are you defining "age" as your vitality, or as the physical age of the body? You can increase your vitality at any time. This simply depends upon the elaborate effects of the definitions that your particular society places on these notions.

Q: Well since you keep....

Elan: [interrupts] To answer your question more directly, yes. You can get the effect of feeling younger. Absolutely. If you act as if you believe you are a younger person, you will feel your version of what a younger person would feel.

Q: As our clock ticks on chronologically, obviously I am getting older, but anyway...

Elan: Getting physically older and degrading are two completely separate matters. One of the decisions, one of the notions that individuals upon your planet buy into is that aging equals disintegration and breaking down. They trust in that decision. They live the results of that decision. "I'm 70 now. I can't walk around the block anymore." They act that way. And you see the evidence of the societal approach which is to fall apart as you age.

But it doesn't need to be that way. Aging can also represent increased awareness, vitality, excitement, passion, and living life to the fullest with the benefit of increased awareness on the conscious level.

Q: I like what you're saying.

Elan: You don't have to look at aging as being one day closer to death. You can look at it as having one more day of life. It all depends upon your point of view.

Q: I think I've heard both you and Bashar (another Essesani) indicate that our physical body, and maybe brain also, are capable of like 300 years of life. My question is: what would be the major factors required to achieve 300 years? How would we live? What do we need to believe to achieve that?

Elan: Well, basically, if you acknowledge that it is possible and merely have enough things to do that you are excited about that you are to be too busy to die.

Now, this sounds like we're being funny, but it is quite literal. There are many different ways to live as there are people on your planet, billions. Generally, people die when they don't have anything left to do.

This does not mean that they are not abundantly surrounded by opportunities. They are. Ultimately, it is a determination, maybe consciously, or maybe consciously remaining unknowing (unconsciously). If you begin to decide consciously who you are, you are just too busy.

Q: How important is good nutrition?

Elan: Again, that will depend completely upon the belief that you are expressing. Remember you contain all beliefs. It is the belief that you act upon that determines your result.

If you believe that it is essential to have good nutrition, and then do the opposite, you will create a dynamic and friction.

If, on the other hand, you trust that proper physical nourishment is simply a matter of trusting yourself, trusting your timing, trusting your body, eating when you feel like, not eating when you don't, going about your business, not judging what you eat, not judging yourself for what you eat, you will find that you will reach a healthy equilibrium. Generally, by the way, if you follow this approach, you will eat less. But that is neither here nor there.

Q: Because I've had the idea to put some molecules and atoms into your body, your body is going to make use of it.

Elan: Alright. That is one way to look at it. I would suggest, until you radically change your beliefs, not to swallow rocks, but it is up to you.

Q: Does the same answer apply to regular exercise?

Elan: Generally, again, that will depend upon your belief. Automatically, if you are engaged in your reality, due to the nature of the way you create space and time, and how you move things around within your reality, if you are engaged in your excitement, in your passion, with integrity, you are moving your body.

Whether or not you need to purposefully put aside a time depends. For example, if you are not living in a way that is truly representative of who you are, you may find yourself being sedentary both literally and symbolically. In that case, exercise makes sense.

But if you are engaged in the living your life to the fullest, being fully who you are, then you will be very busy. In that case, you don't need to put aside a time to do so.

How do I change?

Q: I'm learning about change. Could you tell me, please, how to change?

Elan: Well, you are always changing. Change is the only constant and you cannot force change. It is simply natural. Your willingness to allow simply allows the natural flow of change.

Where people get confused is that they believe they have to force change but force actually makes things seem to stay the same. The mechanism that makes things change is simply allowing the natural mechanism of change to progress.

Did that answer it?

Q: I think so.

Elan: Use all your creations, particularly, to tie back the ones you label extraneous. The fact that you are labeling them extraneous means you are not using them to your advantage. You seem to hang up at those points.

You can always use any situation that you have been willing to label negative. As we have shared, all situations are fundamentally neutral. You supply the meaning, and the meaning you assign determines the effect you get back.

Why, in a given situation, would you choose to label negative something that is neutral? That allows you to trace back to your beliefs. When you own your beliefs, you can change them.

You have perpetuated the beliefs that you have created, because once you believe them you then create the corresponding emotions. You feel like a person would feel who believes that. You then think and your thought patterns are structured according to those feelings and that belief. The final end product is you then act like the person that has that original belief.

Once you recognize that you have a belief that you do not prefer, you can own it. Then you can simply formulate a new belief. Use your imagination, which is a real power and tool that you have, to feel how a person with the new belief would feel. Allow yourself to feel those feelings. You will find it quite simple. Your imagination is very good at that.

You will then begin to see how a person thinks who has the new belief. Also, going one step further, by using your imagination, you can picture how a person with the new belief would act and how they would handle each situation.

If you will simply act that way, then you setup the vibration in the physical reality that allows you to now be a person who acts as though you have the new belief. You then create the new reality through the same mechanism through which you created the old.

Does that make sense?

Q: Thank you. Thank you. Thank you.

Elan: Thank you as well

How do I manifest something I want?

Q: How do you become the vibration of what you wish to be, knowing it's going to be sometime in the future? I know I'm talking about future but still...

Elan: Oh! "I'm becoming" versus "being." Proceed.

Q: Somehow the timing is not there yet but...

Elan: That, by the way, is an assumption. It may be based on whatever evidence you gather but the timing is always right now, should you decide.

By all means you can continue to put out in front of you, "to become something," but what I am sharing and part of the point of this interaction is to understand that you are deciding that. You are building that particular condition into your decision.

Do proceed.

Q: Can you say more about how to be that vibration?

Elan: Deciding is being that vibration. There are different ways to word "decision." One of them is simply that you always, in any given moment based on whatever criteria you use, every right now, commit to who you are.

You make a commitment, "I am this person that is being that vibration 100% and completely," in that moment, in that right now moment. When you decide "I am" and fill in that blank, you are that vibration right then and there.

Often individuals will build into their decision, as you have said, the idea of becoming. Then you are the vibration of becoming versus the vibration of being, or the vibration of creating yourself towards being that person on a gradient.

The question you ask is an excellent question because it allows us in no uncertain terms to define that making the decision is being that person, and therefore expressing that vibration right now in this moment.

For the purposes of illustration, consider that it is always right now and life exists on a line. In each successive now you make a decision. The decisions you make will either “make” or support that you are already that vibration or are one step closer toward being that vibration. You can also create it such that it cancels out or stamps out the vibration altogether.

This is why we say that essentially you create in three steps. One is decision, and two is trusting the decision, and then three is action. Trusting can also be described as maintenance and maintaining the commitment to that decision.

If you understand that when you decide you are that vibration, you are that person, because you have established yourself as that vibration. Trusting that decision is simply a matter of occasionally, when and where appropriate and necessary, reminding yourself of that decision in its full potency, in its full committed form.

Does that make sense?

Q: Yes. So, maybe I should provide a specific example. For example, what if I wanted to move or get a particular job? Or wanted to do something that you are not already doing. Suppose the circumstances have not fallen into place yet. How do you get things moving faster? Do they move faster because you are that vibration?

Elan: Absolutely, and also keep your eyes very wide open and “on the lookout” for the opportunities that are available, that are present, and that would seem to physically create the conducive circumstance that would then produce the physical result.

Everything begins first again in consciousness. When there is the idea of physical events to play out, it always begins with the commitment in consciousness. Then your reality positions itself in such a way whereby your circumstances are either a straight line: one thing at a time that expresses your decision of being that person to whatever degree is available in that given moment.

Does that make sense?

Q: Yes.

Elan: In other words, when you state, “I feel like it’s time to move,” you’re making a decision. Initially that decision is a concept that creates a vibration that attracts the circumstances into the right now moment. That makes it conducive toward the physical move. But it begins with the foundational establishment of the vibration of that person.

Q: When it comes to everyday things, like making decisions that are related to moving, should I always act as if I’m investing?

Elan: Yes. You would do what you would do if you completely accept yourself as that being, which takes into consideration that “now that I am this being, I am this being in these circumstances. From what is available in these circumstances, this being that I am now would do this.” You are being, acting, being that person, which then again creates the seemingly shortest path physically in the direction that you say you seek.

We are bumping up against what you call limitations of language but is this clear?

Q: How can I deal with the limitations in reality?

Elan: That is a decision you are making. There are no limitations for being who you are, other than the ones that you build into your decision.

In other words, individuals will sometimes say, "Well, Elan, where you are what you are saying is easy, but down here it is not so practical." To which I will reply, "Well, that is the difference in the decisions we are making. If I were down there, I would not choose to see it that way and, therefore, I would still get the same results I get in my society upon your planet. I know this to be so because I have lived a past life on your planet, where I have seen in absolute application that this works."

Q: If you are familiar with my situation, can you give me any advice?

Elan: Loosen up on the specifics, and simply understand that what you desire is to create a more conducive atmosphere to express yourself without needing it to rigidly be any particular place.

If you insist that it be a particular place, it can actually take longer. If you loosen up and allow unexpected avenues, you will find new opportunities and new ideas will open up that were not available to you before. I am specifically and purposely being general.

Q: So, I decide to be surprised?

Elan: Alright. But the idea is to maintain your resolve in deciding that "I am a person who creates the conducive atmosphere to fully express myself." That takes care of it all, what you call your house and your car.

My jewelry was stolen.

Q: In the last few days, someone robbed all my jewelry, and it was like really precious to me. I don't want to have a negative belief on that.

Elan: Alright.

Q: How can I let go of the little bit of negativity that I feel on that, and transform it?

Elan: Alright. Perhaps we can begin by examining that little bit of negativity. Can you define it?

Q: When I realized I had lost everything, I just stood there. What came to me was that it was not a man but a woman who did it. The negativity was that she was in this room and that this other entity was right here in this bedroom. That was part of the negativity.

The second part of the negativity was that I'll never have these priceless pieces of jewelry back again. Someone else has them and is enjoying them. I try to say, "Well maybe they need them more than I."

But I attach so much feeling to a few of those pieces that were taken that I can't seem to... Maybe you can give me some direction on how to let go of that negativity.

Elan: Alright. Do you perceive overall that you are pleased with the manifestation of abundance in your life, or do you feel on some level that there is perhaps not enough?

Q: Yes, I do feel that there is not enough, but not for me. I feel there's not enough for my children.

Elan: Alright. We mean for you at this point.

Q: For me? Yes...

Elan: Yes what?

Q: Yes, for sure.

Elan: Do you also understand that abundance is a flow? Money is not pieces of paper in a room; it is a flow? Do you understand what it as a symbol, and what it allows you to do?

Our strongest sensing in this particular instance is that you have unconsciously created a void to allow more flow. Now before we proceed, does this ring true with you?

Q: Well...I said to my sister-in-law Pat tonight, "If this was just the opposite, I would really be in it over my head."

Elan: How so?

Q: Well, if the negative were a positive, there would be so much positive stuff around me it would be hard to accept.

Elan: Oh. Alright.

Q: And not only that, my cat Max left today. He's never been outside of the house. So, that's another negative I've brought on. Max is gone, and...

Elan: We sense that Max will return; so, for now you can put that aside.

Q: Oh good.

Elan: In regard to the void, the idea is simply this: to whatever degree and for whatever reason an individual creates a void of this style, that void will be filled exactly the same “value” of “stuff.”

You can truly look at it as being that positive. The degree of what you consider to be lost and the value of what was “lost” will be the value of what you now attract inward in a proportional manner. Did that translate?

Q: Yes

Elan: So, keep your eyes out. Now that there is a vacuum, you will see an opportunity that will allow you to manifest, proportionally speaking, abundance of equal or greater value.

Are nuclear proliferation and ET interaction related?

Q: I've been very interested in the acceleration of the proliferation of radioactivity through man-made nuclear industries. From what I've understood, it seems to be rapidly spreading into our society and the planet, and I'm wondering whether there is a relationship because it seems to me that between the landing at Roswell in the forties and then the splitting of the atom around that time there is a connection.

Elan: It is more about the knowledge of those things occurs at a similar time. If you are constantly concerned about being poisoned, however, this does not allow you to be fully who you are.

First of all, your planet can absorb more and transform more of this than your scientists currently understand. There is more space for it to diffuse out than perhaps you believe.

We also sense that there are upcoming inventions that will allow you to store the waste in a particular fashion in which the more harmful radioactive aspects can be filtered out and you have a less malevolent style of waste.

But this is not the point. The point is: where are you fixing your attention? If there is something that you can do about it, go right ahead. If not, simply be conscious and don't be think about it and don't add to it.

Overall your planet can absorb a lot, and we do not feel you will exceed this point and that you are safe and sound.

Q: Is there a relationship between this and ET interactions?

Elan: It may seem this way, but it is more because you are more aware of what is going on because your communication networks have linked you up more.

From an interaction standpoint, we are not invasive and will not “come down” without an invitation. When you are united to the point where you can consciousness-wise be in an inviting mode, then it will be possible. And at that point your entire spectrum of technology will also take a turn and you will be globally unified enough so that we can invite you as full members of the association of worlds.

Q: And in other words, the potential impending threat is something that would unify us? How would the radioactivity unify us?

Elan: That is not really what we are saying. We were concerned to some degree that the total nuclear annihilation of your planet might result in ripping through the fabric into other dimensions. We were concerned with it getting out of your backyard into the backyards of others.

But it is most strongly our understanding from this point forward that there has been a mass consciousness decision to simply not blow yourself up by those means so that is no longer, loosely speaking, a concern of ours.

How can I deal with feeling terrified?

Q: I believe that I am allowing myself to see a reality...

Elan: [interrupts] Which means a slight shift in your perspective. Remember that any shift is a grand change. Now the change will not only be in your ability to act in your reality but also in your perception, as now you are seeing through the new beliefs which are less limited and more empowered.

Q: Okay. To make a long story short, every time I get a massage some very terrifying feelings come up. I believe these things are coming up because I'm in a more empowered position to look at them. I feel a release and a sense of freedom, but simultaneously I feel like it's a bottomless pit.

Elan: Oh no, no, no. The terror is that it is a bottomless pit. It is not. You are experiencing this because at this time you are now ready and able to deal with it.

But I remind you, no matter what you find, it- it has no effect on you until you match and agree with it. It has no momentum. Since you keep choosing to think about it, it seems to carry a momentum, but you can choose differently. In any moment you can simply choose, "Alright, I feel this terror." Then find a place, a comfortable place wherever it may be, whatever is convenient for you, and heal it. Imagine it. Feel it as much as you can and dialogue with yourself. "Wait a minute! This is the most terror I have ever felt! Can I feel more?" And allow yourself to feel it as much as you can.

Allow. Allow yourself to feel it. Then ask while you are feeling it, not later in a hypothetical situation, "What must I believe? What is coming to me? What do I perceive has happened or whatever?" Something will come up.

Regardless of where it seems to be coming from and why it is coming up, it is only coming up because you are recreating it without addressing it, acknowledging it, and owning it.

Are you prepared to own that degree of yourself?

That is the bottom of the barrel. And once you do this, there is no longer a bottom. The barrel no longer fills because you are not denying who you are. When you deny the way you feel or think, you fill the barrel, while acknowledgement allows it to empty.

Do you understand, and is that practical?

Q: Yeah. It's kind of like this is the ultimate fear of mine. So, when I can allow it, then I will get through it.

Elan: Exactly. It is proportionally related to the amount of benefit that you will receive. So, if it is the ultimate fear, then it brings with it the ultimate reward.

Q: That's what I sense, and that's why I'm pursuing it.

Elan: That's why, for instance, if you feel "anxious" or "nervous" and you understand what I am saying, you realize that that there is some excitement there too. There is an anticipation that what you are doing is transforming yourself most fully.

So, the very thing that most of you fear the most, no matter what that is brings along with it, is your greatest liberation if you are willing to face it rather than deny it.

Q: Some of the feedback you know I get is: "Why bother doing this? All you're doing is upsetting yourself." But I trust in myself that "this is something I need to do to get free."

Elan: Well, the freedom will simply be when in the moment you decide “enough is enough.” This has done what it has been created to do. I understand the message, and I simply no longer choose to experience it. Then you have to allow and interact with your reality consistent with this new interpretation.

Q: But I can only say that when I'm feeling the intense fear, right? If I say it now, “Okay I allow this to serve me and I hear it,” that's not what you're talking about?

Elan: Well, the point is when you feel it is part of the point. It is not only important that you feel it but when you feel it. The timing always plays a role, whether you choose to take the opportunity and use it or not. Your feelings are always telling you right now, if you want to, you can transform it. Its mere presence alone in that moment is enough to tell you that.

Q: To get really specific, if I'm shaking, and feel this terror, I can at that point say, but I have to really feel it...

Elan: Do not hold a bit of it back. That one bit that you hold back is the embodiment of the remaining denial. In other words, to be liberal with your language, “freak out.” Do whatever you wish, but do not hold back, and get to the point where it kind of feels like “now what?”

It will not simply keep pouring out; it is not a bottomless barrel. This is one of the things that will allow you to see that it is not a bottomless barrel.

When you get to the “now what” stage, you can question, “What must I believe to have created that?” You can then add “What must I now believe about myself to think this?” A little pat on the back never hurts. If something else comes up, do share again.

Do we have to hit the wall before seeing the light?

Q: Why do so many of us have to, in our language, “hit the wall,” first before we see the light?

Elan: Well, that is simply one way to look at it. In your society you tend to believe that if you hit bottom, everything else is up.

But that is only one way to look at it. Another way to look at it is when you go down here you go much faster. But the point is that it is all perspective. Nothing in your life is extraneous and everything as an event, as a statement, as a circumstance, is a neutral set of props, whereby you are the assignor of meaning. You supply the meaning to the neutral set of props or people or events. And the meaning you assign determines the effect you get out.

But the exact same event can yield every single possibility of an outcome depending on which meaning you plug in. And your willingness to begin to look at these situations as a creator, who looks at “Why I create something,” not “Why is this happening to me?”

You begin not by saying “This is very bad and therefore life stinks.” You begin to say, “Well on the surface this obviously looks quite negative. In this society, when this happens it is generally referred to as negative but now I am looking at my reality as a creator. So therefore, I acknowledge the negative interpretation, but I also acknowledge it can be a blank prop. And I also acknowledge that if I created it, there is service to be gleaned from it.”

If you then ask, "How is this of service to me, exactly the way it is," you take the same prop and get a different effect and allow it to serve you. And as you allow each event to serve you, you take back your power.

You can redefine your reality according to preference by first acknowledging the negative meaning and then finding the positive. When you do this, you cannot create negative effects from that point forward, and therefore you will not keep spiraling downward.

Many people in your society buy into the idea of karma and that for every five minutes of extreme ecstasy you must have five minutes of misery for balance. All ways are valid, and all truths are true, and so that is obviously one way to do it. But that's not the only way.

You have created a reality of polarity where there is positive and negative. As you expand your consciousness, you will be more aware of both positive and negative but what you experience is actually determined by your actions.

In other words, if you act only when you are positively aligned you will only experience positive results, and you can still be aware of negativity but it will be through others.

What do anguish, anger, pain, and sadness mean?

Q: When we experience emotions such as anguish, anger, pain, and sadness, are those emotions manifestations of non-allowance?

Elan: Well, they are the manifestations of beliefs and are generally limiting beliefs. Sadness, or what you call grief, is the result of believing that you have lost something.

Anger is a little bit different. Anger is an emotion of alignment. Anger allows you to see in any given moment, "This is who I am, and this is absolutely who I am not!" It allows you to define yourself through differences.

Many individuals, however, usually allow it to degrade into "invalidation" and "judgment" of the thing that has just shown them that "this is not me." So, anger is a little bit different.

Was there something else you wanted to know about?

Q: To further this, if someone is experiencing these emotions but chooses not to fully allow them and see the positive meaning, what happens?

Elan: Well, the idea is to allow yourself to glean what you must believe to be feeling that way. If you acknowledge that belief, then you can change it. When you express the new belief, it will have emotions as well, and these will replace the old ones. If, on the other hand, you deny your belief you will continue to recreate it and the corresponding emotions. It will repeat itself.

So, to answer your question directly, first allow yourself to feel the feelings in the specific situation and moment that you are feeling them. Then allow yourself to acknowledge what you must believe to feel that way.

Look at that belief. "Ah I do believe that! That is a limiting belief!" Then you are in a position where you can begin to talk about a new or alternative belief that will be more empowering.

Q: Okay. Thank you.

Elan: Is that usable or more confusing?

Q: It's complicated but usable.

Elan: Well, it is really quite simple. As you glean what you believe from an emotion, and if you decide "I wish to keep that belief," go right ahead. If once you acknowledge a belief, you instead decide you do not wish to have that belief, you can express the new belief.

Simply after you acknowledge the old belief, call up the new belief and use your imagination to furnish a set of actions for the new belief. Imagine how a person with the new belief would act. Then you can walk into any situation in which you might have acted in the old way, and act in the new way, as a person with new beliefs. You will get a different result and your emotional feedback will then change. Perhaps that makes it more confusing?

Q: Sometimes there's something holding me back to the original belief.

Elan: Well, what an interesting idea. But what could hold you back, since everything is you?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Alright. Now that you realize that you are holding you back, you can simply stop forcing and trying to conform and instead let go and allow. You can say to yourself, "Now that I know this concept, now that this makes sense to me, I will do it."

Once you do it yourself and have the direct experience, it will make a lot more sense to you. It will be much more relevant to you. But is this at least concise and clear? If not, can you ask another question to clarify it?

Q: I think I got it at this point.

Elan: Well, again, if not, check back in, alright?

Q: Thank you.

Some of my beliefs feel very painful.

Q: This a good topic for me. Since the last interaction I've been thinking about this topic a lot. I have a very strong desire in my life of what I want to create. Since I have this desire and vision, all my limiting beliefs have been coming up...

Elan: Oh. What a coincidence. Perfect timing.

Q: I've been saying that, and some of them feel so painful. I believe that I'm interpreting some of them negatively...

Elan: Well, do you understand that you have the strength to feel the most painful one of them? And do you also understand that you also have the strength to feel it and to completely understand where it comes from? Plus, do you understand that after doing that and acknowledging it that you can allow and completely transform it?

Q: Yes, and I have been doing that.

Elan: Are you afraid that there is something within you that can overcome you? And before you answer, I perceive that you do.

[audience laughing hard]

Q: Yeah, I do.

Elan: Now, on some level, since you have created it all, analytically, does it truly make sense that you would create something you couldn't handle? Another way to ask that is: does it make sense that extraneous things would creep into your life or creation itself?

Q: No.

Elan: Alright. Are you willing to perhaps acknowledge that because you are feeling it, that in and of itself, as we had discussed with the desire, that is enough to tell you that you can handle it?

Q: Yeah

Elan: Alright. Happy swimming.

Q: Yeah, but.... No, I understand that, but what it is bringing me to is some very deep changes within myself.

Elan: Well, how exciting. The deeper that you root out the truths that no longer apply to you, the larger and grander sweeping are the changes that then occur as a reflection in your mind.

Q: Right.

Elan: One way to look at it is, "Oh no! I'm at the bottom of the barrel." Another way to look at it is, "Oh joy! I'm at the end of the road, the rainbow."

Q: I need to state what my truth in a particular situation is to a particular person.

Elan: Alright. Well, in many of the discussions that we have had with you in particular, and also with many of you in general, when you do the things that are consistent with your decision, then your reality provides new circumstances that will allow you to continue the flow and move forward. Where you and others hang up is in pondering, deciding, thinking, running it over and over. There is a paralysis of analysis.

Q: I know. Well, I do that.

Elan: Well, you do not have to do anything, but if you do then as you have seen in many of the other times that you have, first of all, the results will not be what you expect, and second of all, you will then allow your reality to deliver the feedback to either keep you in that direction or to point you in a straighter direction.

In other words, avoidance, in and of itself, is the only thing hanging you up.

Q: Right. So maybe that's what I'm learning about the belief I'm employing.

Elan: That is one of the ideas. But again, when I spoke of happy swimming in the sea of your beliefs, that will generally be preceded by a dive into that sea. Have the open posture of allowance to know, "I am ready to allow my reality to deliver the vestiges of my obsolete beliefs." And get excited about it.

And, in fact, if you wish to simply cut through much of this, allow what you perceive to be the worst come up. After you handle that and show yourself in no uncertain terms how simple it is, everything else will pale in comparison.

The intensity of the negativity is directly related to the strength you have to handle it.

Is this of practical service?

Q: Yes.

Elan: It is, as you say, as simple as one of your phone calls, isn't it? Should I give you the phone, or will you make the move by yourself?

Q: I'm moving by myself.

Elan: Alright. We have no phone. How convenient.

Q: Thank you.

Elan: Thank yourself. You are creating your life flawlessly and have now injected the concept of preference and are beginning to get the feedback that that works as well. Thank you.

You said that you cannot escape from yourself?

Q: You have referred to the word, “yourself,” and said that “you cannot escape yourself.” Does that mean the physical aspect of ourselves?

Elan: No, no, no. In no way does it mean the physical. In fact, you can shift your point of view so far from the physical that you perceive that you are out of your own body.

What I mean by “yourself” is what you would refer to as colloquially the “I am” within each and every one of you. This is what we sometimes refer to as your signature vibration.

Change is the only constant. Your face, your appearance, your attitude, and your beliefs change. The only thing that allows you to identify you as the same you is the “I am.” This is your own signature vibration. Does that translate?

Q: Not really.

Elan: Are you in any way physically similar to the way that you were when you were born?

Q: No.

Elan: Do you think the same way?

Q: No.

Elan: Do you carry yourself the same way?

Q: No.

Elan: How do you know that you are the same person?

Now, before you answer, the answer to that question is the answer to your question. That is what I mean by "yourself." It is the infinite and eternal yet multidimensional portion of you. It is your soul or over soul or higher self. If this is not clear, please continue to ask.

Q: I understand what you're saying, but basically what you are saying is that our perceptions all emanate from the "I am" vibration. In other words, we can't go anywhere?

Elan: Everything is you. You created it all. You contain it all. When you express yourself in this physical reality you hide pieces of yourself from other pieces, and this is what you call your subconscious. All beliefs, subconscious and conscious, make themselves obvious in your reality as your reality. You cannot escape who you are since it is all you.

Ah! Here's another way to think about it. You cannot escape what you truly believe. It will always in some way make itself obvious. If you will deny that belief and put it back and hide it from another portion of yourself, it will still again get in line get to the front and will present itself to you. So you can never escape the beliefs within you. Is that clear?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Alright.

Is there a group momentum?

Q: Okay the other question was actually my husband's. He says "Hello," but...

Elan: Oh...

Q: it's a good question.

Elan: They're all good.

Q: If you are in a group and everyone is focused and thinking on given topic, is there a momentum?

Elan: From our own particular perspective, we would not use the terminology "momentum," and instead would say "concentrated and organized focus."

From time to time, the topic will come into your awareness. At those times, you can recognize that "I have desires" or whatever the topic is. Then you can focus on it. But this is more about everyone agreeing to focus on the topic than it is momentum.

Momentum is completely illusionary. You create what you perceive to be momentum and perpetuate the recreation of it in each moment. It appears to have its own life, but this is an apparency. In any moment, you can cease or continue to create it. Momentum is an illusion. If momentum had a life of its own, you could not immediately stop it. There would be, what you call, some after-movement.

Q: So, would that mean that having a group of this size concentrate on it wouldn't facilitate it?

Elan: Well yes it would, but I would not refer to that as “momentum,” simply “concentrated focus.”

Q: Okay, so that would make it easier.

Elan: To help you understand this better, realize that I do not prepare what I say to you. In fact, I have no idea what I am going to say until I say it, for it is completely irrelevant to me until I say it. I do not ponder it ahead of time.

Q: Okay, I understand. Thank you.

Elan: Well, that is not quite all. Let us explain with an analogy. Imagine that a car drives by and splashes you. You kick the car with your foot and it hurts. Every time a car comes by and splashes you and each time you kick it your foot then hurts. This, however, does not mean it is the same situation each time. You are always a different person but by taking a similar action you get similar results.

Is that clarifying? We wish that is.

Q: Yeah, it is. Yeah, it is.

Elan: If any idea comes up in this regard, please share, for we wish for full clarity. Alright?

Q: Okay.

Elan: Thank you.

How does action fit into allowance?

Q: When you're allowing, how do you not miss on taking action?

Elan: Well, again, allowance is an overall orientation. It is not the entire emphasis. Allowing your reality to be what it is will include the idea of then acting on the opportunity that you have allowed yourself to attract.

Thank you for the distinction. This is one of the reasons we request clarification in these more intensive formats.

Does that help?

Q: Yeah, it does. I just see that, you know, a lot of times people don't....

Elan: They wait around for the safe to fall upon their heads. Rather than taking action they wait around for money to just fall into their hands.

Q: Yeah, and they don't see the opportunities that are all around them.

Elan: Well, allowing your reality to be what it is includes opening your eyes very wide and seeing what it is.

Q: And in terms of limiting beliefs, this week I did that.

Elan: You are by no means alone.

Q: Yeah, that's my next question. Something that comes up for me a lot is deserve-ability, especially when it's related to desire.

Elan: Do you deserve?

Q: Yeah.

Elan: Oh. Alright. You got that out of the way pretty easily.

Q: But by allowing myself to acknowledge that, I just cycled through it so fast that it just went away.

Elan: Well, thank you for making another point. And that is to allow yourself to feel your negative emotions or whatever you are perceiving as a negative experience. Rather than cutting it off and putting it back into the closet, you allow it to play out. This gives you the opportunity to glean messages and generally provide some opportunity for action.

Q: Yeah, and when you allow your negative emotions and process them and acknowledge the beliefs it sort of becomes funny because...

Elan: Oh, thank you.

Q: It's like when I near the end of feeling it and allowing it, I just start laughing. I'm like, "How does this serve me?"

Elan: You are centered, and from that centered state, now you will act upon what is available. When you lament over what is not available, you are still doing something.

Q: Like looking into the past.

Elan: Well, projecting a negative future from that past. But another way to look at it is that you've already done that. Why bother to do it again?

Q: True.

How do I love myself?

Q [hesitantly] Elan. Hi. Can you tell us- okay, hi...

Elan [interrupts]: I will not force you to have too much fun. Do you wish to interact?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Thank you. Proceed. And to you, greetings.

Q: I wonder if you can...Well, personally when I don't feel loved, I feel extremely depleted, and when I try...

Elan [interrupts]: Why do you do that to yourself?

Q: Well, because...

Elan [interrupts]: In other words, what I mean by that is when you say you do not feel loved, I remind you, only can your ability to perceive something be as good as your ability and willingness to put that out. In order to understand what it is to feel really unloved, you must also understand what it is feel really loved, and that is a choice.

When you are willing to unconditionally love yourself, then you will feel love from others no matter what they seem to put out, because you understand that fundamentally that is the stuff reality is "made of." Unconditional means that you love yourself no matter what, not if you only do this and that.

If you say to me, "I do not feel love," I say to you that you are choosing in that moment to not love yourself. You are not loving yourself because there is some condition you have decided that you have not fulfilled.

Q: I agree with you. That's my problem. My problem is that...

Elan [interrupts]: By the way, you have no problem, simply a situation that you have not allowed to transform. You are discussing it now and entertaining the idea to transform it. So, no problem at all.

Q: Okay. So, I'm ready to...I would like a tool to take me from a place of "I don't feel loved," to this higher state I get when I am in meditation. It's a blissful place and it is only about love.

Elan: May I ask you a question? Do you wish to be loved in each and every moment?

Q: I always tell myself I am loved.

Elan: Oh. Alright. Do you wish to be loved in each and every moment?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Then love yourself in each and every moment. I am not being facetious, and I am not being sarcastic. I am not even displaying irony, at least not for this moment.

It is that simple. Allowing yourself, by simply reminding yourself that "oh yes, I love myself. I've forgotten, I remind myself" is all there is to it.

Q: Well, I did that tonight as I was doing dishes. I realized that I was not in a place of feeling very lovable. And I looked in the window and saw my reflection....

Elan: Alright, you are insisting that you must feel lovable to be loved. That is a condition. Unconditional love means, "I love myself no matter what."

"Well, I'm doing things I don't like right now. So what? I'm doing things that perhaps I wish I weren't doing. So what?"

Q: Okay. So, I guess my point is, when I said, "I love myself," I didn't feel it. So, I'm trying to figure out how I feel it.

Elan: What did you feel?

Q: That I didn't love myself.

Elan: Oh, alright. So, then you didn't truly make the decision. You act as though there are two versions of "you" going on here, one that is making a decision and another which isn't feeling it. And there is truly only one you.

The you that says, "I don't feel it," is the same you that would also say, "Well I don't need to feel that. I know it's there. I've decided I love myself, and perhaps in this state I may not feel it, but it doesn't change my commitment. It doesn't change my decision that, 'I will settle for nothing less than my own love.'"

Q: So even though I feel something else in that moment, that's just...

Elan: Well, let us say this. If you say, "I love myself," then you feel something. What you feel may be something different. It may be evidence to the contrary. If that's how you label it and treat it, then that's how it will seem to be.

But if instead you say, "Well I don't feel it, and that would seem to be evidence to the contrary but--wait a minute--I am looking at that evidence through old eyes. I know I have just chosen to love myself. I know I can do that without condition. And now I also know that I can love myself and still feel this way in this moment. It's not preferable to me. I would prefer to feel that love, but I know that it is possible to still feel this way and yet still renew my commitment to love myself."

That is what will shift it. If you say, "Oh! I don't feel loved. There's the evidence that I must not love myself," you then don't continue to assign that self-love and so you then don't feel it.

Instead you can say, and reinterpret it by saying, "Oh that's interesting, I don't feel it, but that doesn't change my decision. I still have decided to love myself."

It is not that your decision didn't stick; it is your very rigid interpretation and insistence that the lack of feeling means that you are not loved, and then making the new decision that you are not loved. "I must not love myself, because I didn't feel it."

Do you understand the distinction?

Q: Yes.

Elan: It has to do with persistence and commitment to the decision no matter what. And, by the way, as a fringe benefit when you do that, you will feel it. Maybe not on the first time or second time or third time, but if you simply decide that you love yourself and have no conditions, not even that it must feel a certain way, you will get the benefits of that love: the emotional, the spiritual. and the physical benefits of that love.

Also, then that will reinforce your willingness to express unconditional self-love, which paradoxically is the only thing that will make it seem as though suddenly others love you so much.

Does that make sense?

Q: Yes. I thank you very much.

Can you explain various properties of light?

As a reminder for this question, a person is speaking for Elan, and the questioner is actually physically talking to the person, while Elan provides thought response which are translated into spoken English words.

Q: Would you please tell us about light, the nature of light, and its purpose and meaning?

Elan: It simply depends on what you mean by the term, “light,” in the very ultimate sense. Creation itself, for example, expresses itself as a white light. However, much of this is arbitrary because light is a far broader form of energy than your visible spectrum of light. Your visible spectrum of light is one slice from the overall bandwidth of light of infinite creation.

We hope this will make sense in translation. The light that we sometimes refer to as the “light of all that is” or the “light of God” does have a physical bandwidth, and that extends beyond that physical bandwidth in both directions reaching its fingers to whatever degree into non-physical reality, into infinite reality.

The light also exists as a pervasive element in the infinite as well as the finite. What you generally refer to as white light seems to you to be a combination of all the different types of light, but this is again a very fine bandwidth. You have a very fine perceptive sense on your end that causes you to be able to interpret that bandwidth in a particular way.

Does this help?

Q: Yes. do you in that society have visible to you more than the spectrum of light than we do, and, if so, do you see different colors?

Elan: To some degree, yes. This would not translate into your language for you do not have vocabulary for it. Perhaps you can understand that our sensitivities are a little bit above and a little bit below what you call the visible spectrum of light from your perspective.

Although, if we were interacting with you, the adjustments that we would make would have us seeing similar things.

Q: Our scientists believe that light is of a dual nature: waves and particles.

Elan: It is far more than that, but it can be perceived to be in either one of those states when you attach to it the variable you call time.

Both of these only make sense in linear reality. You are describing what you would call an infinite idea and finding differences.

Q: I think of light as transmitting--you said energy--but maybe also information.

Elan: You don't need to perceive it as transmitting. In the infinite sense there is no transmitter or receiver. These are linear ideas. It is simply infinite, multidimensional, and eternal, just like all of you.

Q: When we enter spirit form, non-physical...

Elan: When you shift your perspective to no longer seem to express yourself through a physical body. Yes.

Proceed.

Q: You took the words right out of my mouth.

Elan: Perhaps you can assist the channel in washing his hands when you are all through.

[much laughter]

What a fascinating language.

Q: Do we become a spark of light?

Elan: You will perceive yourself in ways that are similar to the way you perceive yourself right now because of your close association with this type of pinpoint consciousness.

There are versions of yourself where you can seem to experience yourself as, perhaps you would say a spark, but a spark implies a very small pinpoint of light, and size has no meaning at that point, so it would appear from your perspective to be an infinite spark.

Q: I heard somebody describe that they could see little sparks of light in their vision and that those are non-physical entities.

Does that sound familiar?

Elan: That is one way to look at it. I understand what you are saying. This can have a multitudinous number of causes.

Q: We believe the speed of light is always a constant throughout the universe. If you agree with that, is that important that it is that way?

Elan: I do not necessarily agree with that, though in what you would call your neighborhood, it would apply for now.

Q: It serves as a reference for us, but is there any other purpose?

Elan: Do understand that some of the characteristics that you are speaking about only become true when you label them in that way, and then when you change your perception the so-called laws also seem to change, because you are now focusing on different aspects of the same reality.

Q: One more aspect of this.

Elan: Oh. Alright.

Q: Does anything else travel at the speed of light? Does electricity?

Elan: It depends on what you mean. If you were to transmit electricity through what you call, "space," yes. When you introduce what you call a resistor, which can be even a wire or cable, then no.

Q: I have heard you tell us that you'll tell us what we're able to handle at any given time. Is there anything more about light you want to tell us right now?

Elan: You're full of it. And even just several days ago you wouldn't have been able to handle it.

Q: I think that's a compliment.

Elan: Alright. If you insist. I meant it that way as well.

Q: Thank you very much.

Elan: I've done nothing. Thank yourself.

What is the purpose of human existence?

Q: Is there a reason why we are still here as a human beings? Is there something that we need to learn? Is it a specific to this particular point in time?

Elan: Not from my perspective. From my perspective you are not here to learn. I understand that that is a popular way to interpret yourself, and to interpret that indeed you start out less, you gain, you gather, you accumulate knowledge, resources, timing, and then lo and behold you are more.

That is an illusion. Remember, fundamentally you are an infinite all-knowing being that is already complete and already contains it all. And perhaps our particular explanation for why you are here is not to accomplish anything, to learn anything, or to work through anything, but only, only, only, because it is available as an option. In other words, because you can be here.

It is the type of thing that your particular nuance of consciousness or soul was attracted to. You wanted to express yourself in these terms simply because you can. It may seem limited, but it allows you to focus on specific things and experience the expression of yourself in these terms.

When you translate, or what you call physically die, you immediately become more aware of more of yourself and immediately understand that what you seem to have learned and gained in this life were things you already knew. You realize that had imposed a forgetfulness upon yourself, so that you can experience them from a slightly different point of view, with a slightly different nuance.

As you say in your society, you have a penchant appreciating something for the first time. "There's nothing like the first time," you say. The paradox is that forgetfulness allows you to experience things as if for the first time.

In fact, if you express yourself as an all-knowing being already, you could not have that particular experience; you could not see things as if for the first time. Nothing would surprise you. You could never seem to learn. You can never seem to discover.

So, these are the prerequisites for why you want to be a human: the joy of discovery, the joy of learning, the joy of unexpected outcomes, the apparency of expansion, and the apparency of growing into more than you are.

More accurately, you are expanding into more of what you already are. You are expanding your recognition about what is already true about yourself. We share this with you not to confuse you or to invalidate your purpose in life, but to allow you to see that you already have access to all of it.

When you go on the assumption that you must learn, and then you build that as a strong premise, you withhold things from yourself, unless you have in some logical way learned them. By being human, you shut off your intuition in the deepest sense. You shut off your access into more of your great wisdom.

By all means you can continue to go about thinking that your soul has a particular job, that it does that job, and then it graduates. However, you are assuming a structure, a hierarchy, that does not truly exist because you are the creator. We mean that literally. The paradox is that that is true for each and every one of you. To each and every one of you it seems like you are the only creator. This is one of the splendor paradoxes of finite reality that exists within infinite consciousness.

Does this help or completely confuse the matter?

Q: It does help to a certain point.

Elan: In other words, rather than having to learn and become more or better, it is simply your opportunity right now to express as much or more of yourself as you are willing and begin to reap consciously the experience right now.

Q: Okay. So how do we change our assumptions?

Elan: Simply coming into awareness of assumptions that are more preferable and plugging them in. An assumption is another way to say a decision. "I have made this decision. This is what I assume will happen."

Q: If we had not had this opportunity to share with you, how would we have learned this?

Elan: I remind you that I am simply one reflection. You are coming from the premise that you are in a reality, so when you are ready to expose, express, or experience more of yourself you will do so by creating external reflections and symbols to do so. In this case, that's me.

If you had not attracted the synchronicity of this interaction, you would have attracted something else. Perhaps you would have picked up a book, picked up the newspaper, turned on the television, or had a conversation with a stranger.

When you are ready to express more of yourself, you will attract the path of least resistance. Ironically, in your case, it's this interaction. What you need will always be there, even if you're not aware of it, but when you are, you can facilitate it.

This is one of the reasons that we say that it's not important to us in any way, shape, or form that anyone believe anything that we say because it is us saying it. If it's something that does not work for you, you will find something else.

It is simply the law of your own attraction.

Q: Is this true also linearly speaking, linearly in time? Is this true in our so called past? Were there teachers such as you available in the past?

Elan: There have been many different reflections in many different forms throughout your history, although less from an extraterrestrial point of view.

Even today, there are many humans walking around with much of the same ideology that I share with you. In part, this is why your language has the vocabulary to communicate it.

Q: So, we don't have you all alone to ourselves anyway?

Elan: Unless you say so, in which case you will experience the apparency of isolation. But even that is an apparency as well.

Q: I thank you very much.

Elan: I have done nothing. You've done it all. Nice reflection to yourself.

How many alternate Earth realities are there?

Q: How many alternate Earth realities are there?

Elan: Infinite.

Q: Here I am, sitting here very positive, thinking it's nice to be positive. Someone next to me is not thinking that way. They are of a different mind-set, a different reality. It cannot be all on one Earth.

Elan: Though it may appear that someone else may have what you would perceive to be a contradictory viewpoint to your own, there still can be the same foundational vibration of understanding, the same sense of options, the same sense of possibilities, which can allow a commonality of vibrations to seem to exist on the same world.

If that continues, regardless of specific viewpoints and differences, you will appear to continue to be aware of that person. If that gets to the point where you are so different in your approach that you begin to change the foundational vibration of who you are, serendipitously, automatically, simply seeming to happen, you will no longer be aware of those individuals, whether it is because you perceive that they have moved, or you have lost contact with them, or they die.

They can actually continue on an earth that is slightly out of phase with your own. From their perspective they simply have a smooth transition from one moment to the next. You have the same apparency even though you literally occupy different realities.

Q: So, that's how these shifts will be made.

Elan: They are being made all the time. They always have been and always will be. You are more aware of them now, because, as individuals, you are expanding to the point where you can begin to entertain this type of idea.

Q: Oh. I've entertained it quite deeply. I see there's another New York somewhere, another Massachusetts, another Connecticut, identical to this.

Elan: Oh. Alright. There are many. There are in fact an infinite number. This means that not only is every existing Earth so unlike you in a way that you would not choose to be, there are also earths that are already the way you say you wish to be.

By making a decision in the moment, you can spontaneously shift. That is why no effort is necessary to completely recreate your reality in any given moment. There is a corresponding "residence," so to speak, that already exists right now. Does that make sense?

Q: It sure does.

Elan: I understand that these concepts can be confusing.

Q: It's worth clarifying now. With all that I've been reading, everything is accurate, if that's where you want to be.

Elan: But the apparency is that you are going on a straight line on the "same earth," and so, therefore, experientially that is accurate for you. Perhaps that is all you need to know.

Q: Well, in knowing that there are other alternate realities, it makes more sense to me.

Elan: Alright, and perhaps it is useful to understand that everything already exists right now, so it is simply a matter of expressing it, rather than having to do something laborious and effortful in order to get it, no matter what it is.

Q: Now are these other realities experiencing the same types of things as far as their awareness and developing awareness?

Elan: Some yes, some no, depending on the definition of those realities. A reality that chooses to remain contracted, physically separated, for whatever their reasons are, would not seem to have the same types of ideas.

This is why I mentioned, not to baffle and overwhelm you, that there are an infinite number. Every possibility already exists, and it is simply a matter of expressing one or another.

Q: In sharing your view, it's an empowered reality, and you empower yourself. I heard earlier about a woman who was channeling another consciousness, and they said that at the end of this year that we would have no more free will. Now that obviously is somewhere on another reality.

Elan: Well, individuals, in what you perceive to be your present reality, may choose to buy into that and create that effect. What can technically be happening is they can then reside from your perspective in a different reality from who you are right now.

It is not inaccurate to make such a prediction; it is simply perhaps a regional effect.

Q: It seems we have a panoply of choices here.

Elan: An infinite number, again, not to overwhelm you.

Q: What's the point?

Elan: The point is you get to choose!

Q: We get to make the decision.

Elan: Yes! It is up to you and because it already exists, as you say, (I will use your terminology liberally) "no problem." Simply pick and be. You don't need to move a mountain to be who you wish to be. There is already a reality where the mountain is moved.

Does this make sense?

Q: Oh yes. Perfect sense.

Elan: Oh. Alright! Perfect sense?! Thank you!

How do we eliminate karma?

Q: Can you comment on how we going to stop karma? When and how are we going to come to the point where we are going to say enough, that's it. Whatever I owe you, whatever you owe me, that's it. The balance is zero. When and how are we going to do that?

Elan: Simply by deciding. Simply by understanding that you are perpetuating that notion. Karma is an interpretation of what karma means and an imposition upon yourself of that interpretation.

If you interpret your reality as being the product of karmic debt, then you will position your reality to pay back the debt. If you simply understand that balance is instantaneous and that right now you are completely in equilibrium, then you have done what you are asking instantaneously.

You can instantaneously decide that, and proceed debt free, or you can linger on and pay back your debt, or any gradient in between.

Q: I understand what you're saying. My question is how is everyone going to understand it?

Elan: Well again, to be quite succinct, it is none of your business what anyone else decides.

Q: I have decided that it is my business.

Elan: Oh! Very clever! Then perhaps your job may feel like it is never done. You are deciding is to take responsibility for the decisions of others. Now if you are willing to take responsibility for your own decision, being a living example of your own decision, you will attract whatever others are inspired by that decision, and in that sense have the effect that you are sharing.

But never can you affect individuals who make different choices other than them looking at you and saying that's nonsense. So perhaps, if that is your decision, you are taking on a monumental task. And think again of the balance necessary for that.

If you live in equilibrium, understanding that there is no karmic excuse for who you are right now, that you simply are who you are right now, others will notice. And those will be the individuals who will benefit most because it is their timing to reflect back to themselves what they're already willing to entertain and what you are a physical blatant living example of. That is the mechanism. Does that make sense?

Q: Be an example. That's what you're saying?

Elan: Yes, if you wish to impact others. However, convincing others, making them see, and doing it for them, are all fancy words for taking responsibility for them. You can only be responsible to them and for yourself. Responsibility is making choices, and you cannot make choices for others.

Q: I wasn't talk about taking the responsibility but just spreading the word, that's all. What I mean is to just talk about the idea because a lot of people have never thought about this.

Elan: Understood, and, by all means, your attraction to the subject allows you to be a proponent of the subject. When you are living the example of the realizations that you have had, individuals willing to do so will benefit by seeing you as an example, more than hearing you say something that your life is not an example of.

By all means, be at equilibrium right now. That is a decision. "I am at equilibrium." Then yes, there will still be balance, whatever vibration you are being in any given moment will be the reality that you experience, but it will not be the result of something that you have to pay back that is not relevant to your now moment experience.

Q: Thank you.

Elan: Oh, I have done nothing.

Did Jesus live in India?

Q: We have been talking about ascension. I wanted to ask you about what Jesus Christ did. I understand after the crucifixion that he actually didn't die but he suspended the motion using yogic techniques, and after that he traveled back to India. He had lived in India before and he then went back to India and lived there a long life there.

He was an ascended being by that time, and my understanding is he went back and forth to wherever he was needed.

Elan: Well, simply that is only one version of what you call the life of Christ. You are assuming that there is one historical event, however, just as there are an infinite number of probable futures, there are also an infinite number of probable pasts. In one of those infinite number of probable pasts, the scenario that you have shared did occur in that way.

In what you call perhaps the more mass agreed upon probable past, the individual did die upon the cross, and then did "symbolize the idea" of the eternal nature of the soul by making it evident that though the body had died, the soul lived on. That is the most literal interpretation from my perspective.

In terms of the history that you are sharing, whereby Jesus acted as an ascended master, perhaps it would be an example of an assistive being who resided mainly in the non-physical and became physical for specific purposes.

Now, not to be confusing, but again, when you assume one past then our discussion cannot take on the multi-faceted meaning that reality actually expresses.

Does this answer the question?

Q: I read the book Jesus Lived in India. According to the author, and he has done a lot of research, there's a tomb of Jesus in Kashmir, India. There's a lot of evidence that he was there and that he lived there.

So according to your understanding, that's someone else? Or is not true?

Elan: From my perspective, in the most accurate way to state this, in one infinite probable past, that is the case. But again, you're asking the question assuming there is the past only and from the idea of the past only, I cannot accurately answer your question, other than to say that is not the mass agreed upon the past.

However, from the perspective of individuals who manifest that as their past, it is accurate.

Is this translating?

Q: So, what happens to all the evidence? It's, um, it's- I mean...

Elan: As you know quite well, evidence is very arbitrary. What one person uses for evidence for something, another individual can completely use as evidence against the very same thing. It is simply a matter of the fact that believing is seeing, and not the other way around.

When you establish, and essentially this means decide, "I believe this," you then draw all the evidence to prove to you that that is so. So, does everyone else. Evidence is arbitrary.

I understand that perhaps to some what I am saying is unsettling. "Oh what do you mean there's no past? My whole foundation is set up on a past. What am I gonna do? I'm falling apart!"

The idea is that there is a liberation in the now moment from understanding that the past is variable. As you shift who you are right now, the past that completely supports that decision becomes your past. Therefore, the past is no longer a ball and chain it is simply the icing on the cake.

Q: I would like to make a comment, a statement. I see a lot of people on-line who are realizing that the Bible was not accurate and was changed a lot, and the information was...

Elan: [interrupts] Before you proceed, let us use this as an example. Many people do agree with the idea you are sharing, and they find whatever evidence they look for to prove that it has been altered. However, there are just as many if not more individuals who take it, pun intended, as gospel. They will find the evidence as to why it is precisely literally true.

The paradox is that both of those perspectives are correct. Arguing one choice versus another choice truly cannot yield any resolve. It is simply a matter of being willing to make the choice of who you are, who your past is, and if you are willing to validate the past of the other as being accurate and relevant for them. Nonetheless, you still get the evidence that supports the past you choose.

For every singular event, no matter what happened, each and every one of you have your own interpretation of what happened. You then act as though that happened, and you live each moment as though it did happen and it then reflects in your life. You get the effect of it whether or not it even happened.

Where this gets more complex, and I do not wish to add to the complexity, is that there is also no one singular event. This is getting on to the edges of infinity and for now I will refrain.

How would you describe ascension?

Q: I was wondering if you might talk about ascension. There's so many books written these days on ascension. Many of these books are stating that there is about to be a mass ascension. How do you in particular see this event as it is occurring?

Elan: What you generally refer to as ascension generally carries the connotation that as physical beings you are about to transform your physicality into non-physical beings together, as a society, in tandem if you will.

The way ascension is generally portrayed makes it attractive to individuals who use it as a tool to escape this reality. They have made a decision that this reality is not pleasant, and that reality is somewhere where they have been placed. It is a type of jail or hell. To them, the idea of ascension into, perhaps, a light being generally has the fundamental nuance of escaping from this hell.

What is not generally discussed is that there is an intermediate phase between physical expression, limited separated contracted physical expression, and ascension. In this case ascension is a being who now no longer wishes to express itself through what you call the physical body.

We use the arbitrary, arbitrary, designation of 3rd density for the contracted separated physical experience that you now have. 3rd density is simply an arbitrary label or description, not a law.

5th density is the first degree of non-physical expression in a linear sense from physicality. There is a place between 3rd and 5th density, a sort of in-between.

This is what we call 4th density. It is an awakened physical expression whereby you no longer build in the definition of separation from each other, separation from the reality, and separation from what you call God or “all that is.” In 4th density, you experience physical reality in a physical body in purposeful desirous serendipitous effortless terms. Now when I put it this way, you can see that it is a step that you would not want to miss.

Ascending straight to non-physical, 5th density, you would miss that particular midpoint. That desire to jump straight to 5th density is again a tendency in the way that physical beings expand their consciousness seemingly in degrees.

Now you can circumvent this altogether. You can immediately ascend and expand right now. If you close your eyes to do so, and open them, and are still here as the physical being, you can just assume that somewhere in your being, which you can get in touch with and need not keep at a distance, you have decided to allow that transition to be more natural.

Ascension in its purest terms is simply being more of who you already are, not denying who you are, not running from who you are, or the reality that you have created. You are always ascending because you are always expanding into more of who you are. Ascending is not becoming someone you are not. It is being more of who you already foundationally and fundamentally are.

Generally speaking, ascension in your terminology has certain connotations which denote escaping from an unpleasant circumstance. The tendency is to smoothly transition through what we refer to as fourth density, which is again less limited physical experience.

If you understand that natural progression, ascension, in the way that it is portrayed is not actually timely right now. Does this make sense?

Q: You're saying we're not really going through that process at this particular time?

Elan: There will always be individuals and pockets of individuals who may choose in that way to spontaneously create the idea of non-physicality. In general, if they accomplish that, they are doing so simply for the understanding that it is their timing to simply express themselves differently, without, again, the connotation of running from this reality.

But in mass, as a planet, as a mass consciousness, it is my perception that there will not be an exodus ascension to non-physicality within the next many decades of your time. It simply is not the time, and negates where you actually are, which is at the threshold of a more limitless physical expression. Again, this is what many of you tell us that you would prefer.

And when you are there, sometimes, and I mean this facetiously, you need drag yourself kicking and screaming to non-physicality because limitless physicality is so much fun!

Also understand the following: any ascension into more of yourself, any ascension from one seeming level to the next, always brings along with it an interesting realization, and that is that the level that you just have previously believed yourself to exist within exists within you.

Is there anything else?

Q: I believe I heard someone say that it will be several decades at least before we, as a massive consciousness, reach that threshold.

Elan: It can be longer than that by the way. It simply depends how individuals enjoy fourth density. Generally speaking, fourth density can last what you call hundreds of years, maybe a thousand years or so.

Q: I've heard it said that when 144,000 people on the earth get to this point they could affect the entire planet and cause a raise in consciousness.

Elan: Only to the degree that everyone else is willing to create their own version of it. From the perspective of that number of people, it would seem to them that everyone else followed along, but not necessarily from the perspective of everyone else. It is all a matter of timing expression agreement.

Q: One other question really quick.

Elan: Oh.

Q: That relates to it is...

Elan [interrupts] Time's up. Not quick enough.

[audience laughs hard]

Do proceed.

Q: My definition of "really quick" which is longer.

Elan: Alright.

Q: I gave myself 5 minutes for really quick. Okay. Now say...

Elan [interrupts] You have four minutes left.

Q: Say, when this starts to occur, will people have like all the signals, like a minute over in the fifth dimension? They'll say, "Oh! That's kind of neat!" Then gradually, more and more?

Elan: Interesting question, and I was actually about to say that when individuals express themselves in 4th density, though they are still physical, their investment in the idea of physical being is much lighter. Therefore, by expressing yourself physically in a less limited way already, you begin to glimpse the idea, you begin to familiarize yourself with the idea, with the notion of the idea of non-physical consciousness.

And yes, there may be a mass threshold, and individuals will pop in and out. But, when they do so, it will be out of choice, it will be out of simply shifting their perspective, rather than running from any particular undesirable set of circumstances.

Q: I guess what I'm saying is that what I'm talking about relates to a book I just read in which this lady said that how people will ascend will be on a gradual process rather than in the snap of a finger, and that they'll sort of gradually get used to the fifth dimension by going there a little a bit of a time, so they don't shock their systems.

Elan: Well, understand that the readiness is so complete that such a shock is only an interpretation from the third density. To answer your question directly, individuals have the choice. They can stick their toe in and pull it out, or dive right in.

Q: Thank you, Elan.

Elan: I've done nothing. I thank you.

What causes sickness and wellness?

Q: I have a question about healing.

Elan: Alright. Proceed. So do others.

Q: I believe that everything is possible. I believe that, in practicality, most things are possible. I believe that there are spontaneous healings. However, in my experience, I've found that, where people have had spontaneous healing or great assistance that in some cases at least, they re-manifest the problem to an even more serious degree. And I'm wondering if there is any rule, belief system, or energy, that creates that effect.

Elan: The idea is what you generally refer to as disease is a symbol. It represents issues that individuals have been unwilling to acknowledge within themselves to the point where they become overwhelmingly clamorous and then demand an individual's attention.

In general, these issues can be core issues and subsidiary ideas around them. Sometimes individuals only address subsidiary ideas and do not acknowledge the core ideas. They do not make an integrated decision regarding the core idea, and they get the effect you described.

Core beliefs are decisions. In the case of disease, you can ask "What is this situation forcing me to look at, that I would not have looked at without it?" You can look at the core beliefs and decisions that you are making. You can acknowledge those core decisions. You can then make new decisions. In this case, "spontaneous healing," which is simply the re-establishment of equilibrium physically, will be more permanent.

Q: It goes back to getting the message again.

Elan: It goes back to the idea of foundational understanding versus putting on a band-aid.

Q: I know one person in particular which experienced some of this; perhaps you can give me some information on him. His name is George. He knocked cancer flat in a short period of time. The doctor told him that he should have been dead twice.

He went about a year or more without any indication of cancer. He was doing perfectly, but then he developed cancer in many areas simultaneously. I would be curious, if I'm allowed that information, to know what message he needs.

Elan: The allowance should come from him and, perhaps if he asked the question, that would allow me to have access to specific information that is not apparent to me now.

But in general the idea is that there are certain issues and the issue surrounding them that he did look at, but he did not look or address the more core issues.

He can address them at any given moment. He can reestablish his new decision, and he can have the same complete spontaneous healing effect once again.

Q: Would just wanting to go home be a reason to manifest something like that?

Elan: What do you mean by "going home"?

Q: Expiring. Dying. Whatever semantics we use.

Elan: Understand that my particular perspective is that you are home itself. There is nowhere to go to that is anymore you than where you are right now.

So, in the way you phrased the question, my particular response would be “no.” It is more of an escape perhaps than the idea of going to more of himself.

Can you see where in his case that element is present?

Q: Yes, I do.

Elan: Alright. That is, by the way, one of the very common core issues. That is that death would somehow liberate someone from themselves. From my point of view, this is a paradox because anywhere you go is you. Anywhere you’ve been is you. Anywhere you’re going is you. Ultimately, you’re only going from one piece to another. You’re simply, constantly being yourself the entire time but just not acknowledging it.

Does that make sense?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Alright. Now, can you tell me, understanding that individual, what your intuitive perception is of the core issue as it is evident to you?

Q: I think he still has a feeling of “the best the way it is” syndrome, that even though he got his healing, his miraculous healing, I’m not sure he can believe it.

Elan: Alright. Well, understand, fluctuating belief is simply fluctuating decision. Often when people think about beliefs, they assume that they either have a belief or they do not. If they have a belief and it’s not constructive, they feel they have to get rid of it, and replace it with a new constructive belief.

That particular interpretation and the decisions that come from it is rather limiting. When people think this way, they are constantly running from one idea and going to a better idea, needing to get something that they don't already have.

What we remind you of when speaking to you is that you always contain every belief, and it's reciprocal. It's simply a matter of which one are you expressing, not whether you have a belief or its opposite. He has the belief that he is a complete and whole being who deserves to serendipitously and joyously live his life as well as any other belief that he has.

When he is willing to decide, "This is who I am, from choice. This is who I am from decision and desire," and then trust that that decision has stuck, everything immediately shifts to accommodate that decision.

Q: Let me approach this from a different direction.

Elan: Oh, alright.

Q: If one does not address the core belief that is creating or bringing about the disease, what other mechanisms can be utilized, if any, to de-create the disease.

Elan: None. Again, addressing subsidiary beliefs can seem to gloss over the situation temporarily, but these beliefs are not something bestowed upon you that you are stuck with that are locked in your subconscious and very difficult to get at. It isn't that once you get at it all, you find out is what a miserable person you are. That is simply one interpretation of what core beliefs mean.

You contain in your core every belief and its reciprocal. Simply understanding that you are functioning, that you are deciding, that you are interpreting your reality through a specific belief gives you back the decision-making power to choose something else.

Q: So, it's common to all healings that the person healed would address a core belief to be successful?

Elan: On a fundamental level, yes. It can take many different faces or forms in the way that individuals do that. For instance, in acknowledging your totality in deciding to be the fullest you you can be, that decision can replace a different decision from a disempowered belief that you have been expressing. In that case, spontaneous healing can occur without any of the emphasis upon the idea of sickness and wellness.

Q: And without examining that belief specifically also, but just the general idea of empowerment?

Elan: By choosing any reciprocal belief you do examine the idea of the existence of the belief. But you do not empower the disempowered belief, you do not act as though that disempowering belief has a hold or a power that is apart from you and your power. By consciously expressing an empowered version of the belief you take back your power.

Q: When someone chooses a symbol, whether it's a church, a medicine, a healer, or Cheerios, if that belief will do it for them, and they attach themselves to that symbol saying, "Now it's done," are they also empowering themselves that way?

Elan: And although I don't know what Cheerios are, I would agree. Is this a healing substance upon your planet?

Q: It's a breakfast cereal.

Elan: Understood.

Q: I think that clarifies it for me.

Elan: If not, by all means share again.

What do you learn from us?

Q: In the opening statement, you said how you and your civilization learn from us. I was wondering what you get from us? And then I had an answer in my mind: that it's such an exciting time for us on this planet. It is the transformational age. You seem very loving. I feel that. You are here to help us. You're giving us positive reinforcement.

Elan: [interrupts] Perhaps I would take exception to that wording, for I'm not here to help you. You don't need help. I am here because you have expressed the desire to expand your consciousness to the next level. I represent one avenue have you created to reflect that back to yourself.

We are interacting because you are ready, not because you need saving or assistance. We immediately acknowledge your complete power and sovereignty as a creative force, as a creative being. Do proceed.

Q: Okay. I will use you as a positive tool. Thank you.

When you say things like, "We learn from you more about ourselves." Do you mean like us being on this planet? What do you mean?

Elan: Oh, thank you. From your perspective you would perceive us as being 100% consistently, completely positive. I never have an experience that has any tinge of a negative interpretation or a negative feeling.

However, I have in other lives, in being an infinite being, also expressed myself in many different ways, and I have had the opportunity to explore these things, but this is not germane to our focus right now. So, one of the things we learn in interacting with you is the how many ways, how many degrees, and how persistent you are at insisting that you are disempowered, and how you insist on keeping yourself down.

I must say that I do not mean this in any way, shape, or form to be a judgment. We find it fascinating. We do not consider negative expression in any way, shape, or form helpless. In fact, it is quite the reverse. We consider individuals willing to express negativity as being very inherently strong, able, perhaps you can say in your vernacular “gutsy.”

Therefore, the lengths that you will go to in order to continue to express negativity, the ingenuity through which you will continue to express negativity is fascinating to us. You have a veracity of consciousness. Anyway, that’s one thing we learn.

Another thing we appreciate is the opposite of that. We do not see anything wrong with how you express yourself. And we appreciate how you pick yourself up. We enjoy and are fascinated by watching people click over to the idea that they’ve always created it to begin with, and that being conscious and focused about it is an option, and that it is an option that perhaps you might wish to express.

When people do that, whether it is only just for a moment or consistently throughout their lives, we learn things about the way that you will hook into the positive approach. Plus, that reinforces our positive approach as well.

The assistance that I glean happens on a subtle level. To you it may sound as though it is not that significant, but I ask that you simply take my word that it is significant to me and also to members of my society.

Also, our society by choice is telepathic. While we have remnants of an ancient language, we essentially don’t speak, and we communicate telepathically. Because of this, the whole nature of how we express ourselves is very different and we don’t have, for example, privacy. We also don’t have isolation. Nor do we create the feeling of being so removed from what you call “source.” You are source so you can never be removed from source except to define that you are and experience the apperency that you are. We find that fascinating as well. There are many things that fascinate to me.

Something else that we enjoy is how you will respond and react to what you call “unexpected outcomes.” Many times, people in your society will take an unexpected outcome in a situation as an interruption. They will see it as something that could stop them from being who they are. This is also fascinating to us. You always are who you are, so how could something stop you?

Anyway, there are many different nuances of how you express yourself that we learn from. Does that answer the question?

Q: It does. I thank you.

How does sex fit in?

Q: Where in the opposite energies of male and female does the sexual union come in? Do we need a sexual union with an opposite sex partner during our lifetime, or are we totally whole without ever having had that?

Elan: Well, ultimately, most foundationally, it is both. You are already complete, and you don't need something external to prove it. However, very often one way to express that completeness is through that union, which implies the overall oneness and merging, and it allows you to see from both points simultaneously. Does that answer the question?

Q: Yes. So, people who have never been married or have never had a sexual union with a partner are still growing and expanding in their negative and positive polarity?

Elan: Oh, absolutely! And no matter what their particular preference or orientation winds up being, physically this is always so. You will find again the sexual act is an expression of the integration of those energies.

Q: Thank you.

Elan: Oh. Thank you.

Do you have money?

Q: Do you have currency or money as medium of exchange?

Elan: Never. Never. No. All services are considered of equal value, and the exchange is a pure and even equal exchange. We don't have a monetary symbol that has value for us.

From our perspective, your society will move toward this idea as well. This will happen when your planet unites and borders dissolve. The entire distribution of wealth will change.

Q: Do you have a system like communism? I don't like to use the word communism because it has a strong connotation in this country, but it's the best I can find.

Elan: Sort of, but not really. We don't have a structure or hierarchy. We don't have a need to be governed. We all govern ourselves.

If you were to make an analogy, and this will not be that direct for you have so many connotations upon the value of one service versus another on your planet, but the idea is it would be closest to what you label bartering.

Q: So, there's a form of bartering?

Elan: In a sense, again there are connotations to your bartering, and the uneven weight assigned to particular services, which are simply not a part of our equation.

Do you have different jobs that people do?

Q: Do you have different jobs that people do? What kind of daily life is there in terms of work?

Elan: The idea is it is quite spontaneous. So, jobs may get done but we have no professions. We do not define ourselves by the things that we do. We do not derive our self-worth from doing one particular thing. You can say we are a master of all trades.

The idea, more directly, is that we always have what we need to have when we need to have it. We always know what we need to know when we need to know it. We always have around us exactly who, what, and where we need to do what it is we wish to do in any given moment.

Surprisingly enough, so do you. We are simply conscious of it and look for it, and it has become quite automatic that we see nothing else. You have denied some of this and at first need to look for it, but it also, again, becomes automatic after a while.

Do you eat food?

Q: Do you eat food like we do?

Elan: Less and less. We are becoming more non-physical. We label 3rd density as being a physical being and 5th density as non-physical. We are in 4th density between physical and non-physical. As we get closer to that juncture of becoming completely non-physical, bit by bit we lose or no longer choose to utilize external tools. Though we could eat if we wish to and did, by the way, in our past, right now we are more at the point where there is a direct energy exchange with our very environment.

We also find your scenario quite positive and do not judge it as being less than anything upon our planet. Simply another fascinating valid experience and we thank you for your willingness to share it with us.

Q: Thank you for sharing yours with us.

Elan: And you as well.

How do I avoid overreacting?

Q: Do you have any suggestions on how to....I don't want to use the word "get rid of" because you said you can't get rid of anything, but to "like as is" or "flatten" reactivity? I don't like when I overreact.

Elan: Well, the idea is exactly that. When you re-act you are not acting. First, hone in as to when you do it. Watch yourself do it. Become more of a participant in the process. As you are watching yourself do it, ask yourself, "Is this what I prefer? Is this the person I prefer to be?"

Perhaps when the interaction itself is over, sit down and reflect. Use your imagination.

Your imagination, by the way, is also a tool which enables you to create any reality you wish in the following way. What you do is reconstruct what happened. Look at what you did, how you felt, and how you reacted. Then conjure up in your imagination an image of the preferred you, the you you say you wish you were, which you are anyway. The idea is to then plug that situation into that image. Hand it over to the preferred imaginary you. Allow that imaginary you to handle it. Watch how they handle it.

The next time do that instead. You will first of all, love what you see; that is the preferred you, and when you see the alternative way that you "could have handled it," it will be quite simple next time to do that thing.

What will seem most amazing is when you mimic the preferred you in your imagination. In that moment, you are the preferred you, and, therefore, you will get the effect that the preferred you will get, and not the effect that you say you wish you never got to begin with.

The idea is that the first time that you institute this idea, the situation that you are in, that perhaps had somewhat of a predictable outcome, will immediately have a different outcome, for the interaction itself hinges on your participation as a reactor.

When you do not react, it cuts off the process, and the interaction changes. Does that make sense?

Q: Good sense.

Elan: Alright.

Q: Thank you.

Elan: Will you do that?

Q: Yeah, I'll do that.

Elan: Have a good time.

Q: Thanks

Elan: Recognize what we have shared. The imaginary you is available to each and every one of you. You can create a referential preferential you in your imagination.

If instead of reacting, you begin to take a few breaths, conjure up the preferred you, and then hand the situation over to that you. You can head it off right then and there. If you give yourself the opportunity to see what the preferred you would do, you will always love what it does. It will not be any big effort to do that instead. In fact, you will look forward to doing it.

At first you may do a lot of handing things over to the imaginary you, but as you begin to mimic and copy the actions of the imaginary you, they will become as automatic as your reactions were, and, therefore, you can eventually simply skip that step altogether and be that preferred you.

Is there no beginning and ending?

Q: I love everything you're saying here. I am having a lot of fun...

Elan: By the way, the reason you love it is because you contain it, so pat yourself on the back. Anything that you understand and revel in that we share, you would not hear unless you contained it to begin with, so I thank you.

Q: From what I'm understanding, there is no beginning and no end?

Elan: In the ultimate sense, no. Because you are all. You are a reflection of what you label God, multidimensional, infinite, and eternal. Now within the physical parameters of your "physical life" there would seem to be a beginning, middle, and an ending. But in the overall perspective of your totality, your soul's perspective, no, you are eternal.

Q: We just are?

Elan: Yes.

Q: Okay. Thank you.

Is your entire society telepathic?

Q: Is your entire society telepathic?

Elan: Yes. Our entire society upon our planet is “tel-”--telempathic. That is much more descriptive of the mechanism. Empathy, identification with, creating the same thoughts at the same time is more accurate than the idea of reading someone's mind.

How old is your planet?

Q: Can you put the age of your planet in terms that we would understand?

Elan: What you might say, for a particular frame of reference, is that our civilization upon our planet has existed (and we are now translating this into your idea of years, for our perception of time varies slightly from yours) would be approximately from nine to twelve thousand years.

Q: Okay.

You believe that we are transforming?

Q: You said that you believe we're taking a different approach than other societies?

Elan: This is one of the reasons we are observing and co-creating these interactions upon your own planet. We are interested in transitional periods in the histories of civilization.

Q: That's very confident. I need to hear something positive about our future.

Elan: Oh yes. Look around you. You are beginning to see things that you never imagined would happen in your life. On TV, you used to have mostly bad news, but now more positive ideas are beginning to appear. You can use these to validate externally the new positive reflection, which again is only a reflection of your internal beingness.

As you begin to transform yourself, the world around you will change. It is always a reflection of your inner self.

Q: Yet, it seems like there is more violence and more anger.

Elan: Well, if you want to look at it technically, it's not more, just about the same amount, perhaps in some instances actually less.

What are you using as evidence? Are you using the individuals which aid and assist other individuals, or are you using the violence as the evidence for what you believe? And you can use either.

When you begin to act in positivity, not just have it as a notion, your immediate atmosphere, your immediate surrounding environment will seem to change. The people that you interact with, as you begin to be more loving, will seem to be more loving. It will seem like an amazing occurrence.

What will happen is, eventually like a stone dropped into the middle of a pond, this will ripple out further and further, until it literally, literally begins to be on your six o'clock news. But it begins from you.

I have bad habits of thought.

Q: I got into serious trouble a few years ago, in part due to someone else, and we spent some time in prison. When I hear what you have to say, I realize I created it all to discover something.

Elan: Ah! Very good.

Q: However, I flip between taking that perspective that I created it all, and the older perspective...

Elan: [interrupts] of blaming the other individual.

Q: of blaming the other individual.

Elan: Which does not then give you opportunity to do much about it as they are unlikely to change.

Q: And I even blame myself for even having created it to the degree that I'm responsible for it.

Elan: Alright. What will that do for you? What will that allow you to change?

Q: I'm looking for the belief. When I have the perspective that I created this, I do learn a great deal about myself and how I've changed and how I've grown. I try to see the new opportunity in it.

Yet, when I flip to the other perspective, I wonder what it is that I must believe since I feel a need to be attacked, persecuted, punished, and suspicious. I can't figure it out. Can you help me find that?

Elan: Yeah. "All that is" loves you unconditionally and you can begin to look towards treating yourself with that same respect. When you find yourself expressing guilt, remorse, and judgment upon yourself, understand these are not expressions of self-love. So, you can use even that. Go on.

Q: I see that.

Elan: Also, you never truly become the “old you” when you, as you say, “flip like a pancake.” You simply assume the position of the “old you” but you now have more information. You are the “new you” looking through the eyes of the “old you.” But, since the “new you” is also there, the “new you” can see and glean how it serves you. Do you understand?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Is something more specific we can address?

Q: The fact that it's a habit, this flipping.

Elan: Alright. A habit is something that you do that you are not aware that you are doing, therefore once you become aware of it, you don't have a habit. I understand at first this may seem a bit strange, but it is no longer a habit, it is a choice.

Once you even acknowledge that it even might be a choice, the opportunity that that brings is for you to center yourself to the idea that if it is a choice, there are other choices. Then you give yourself the opportunity to begin to seek what those other choices are. If you will look, when one of the choices is to go into self-judgment, at what some of the other choices might be, and decide which choice truly excites you the most, it will most likely not be the judgment.

The judgment in and of itself is an opportunity to begin to look at treating yourself with unconditional love. You can only reflect to others an expression of how you truly treat and feel about yourself.

Q: So, by choosing love, when I judge myself in that moment, I can prefer my way out of this?

[laughter]

Elan: Well, you can transform or choose something else. When you look at it as a choice rather than a habit, saying, "Alright! I've flipped." Saying instead, "Now that I have flipped, I know this is a choice. It's not a very good choice. Well, let me look around. What else is here, right here, right now? Here are some other choices. I can take a walk. I can go watch television. I can sit here in self-judgment. Well, which one of these choices seems most attractive to me? Well, I think any of them except the judgment. I think I'll go take a walk, watch television, and have a drink, or whatever. "Do you understand?

Q: Yes, I do.

Elan: You ground yourself into the moment that you are in, for each and every moment in your reality has within it a particular advantage.

If you are honed in, and fixated, and obsessed in that moment on a particular "negative interpretation" (because, as we have said, everything is neutral) it is an interpretation. You can begin to realize that perhaps that particular moment has other things within it and to look around. So, the technique will vary from moment to moment. There will be different things available in each moment.

Q: Thank you.

Elan: And we thank you as well. Is that all?

Q: Yeah.

Do you believe in God?

Q: Regarding God and our view on Earth of the superior being, source, and maker...

Elan: [interrupts] By the way from our perspective the word “superior,” if you are regarding ability, perhaps would be in that way appropriate, but in terms of quality, “all that is,” which is our slightly more descriptive label for God, is not superior to you. You are an expression of “all that is” itself. You are made of equal stuff.

Do go on.

Q: Do you people have the same thing or a similar thing?

Elan: Well, the reason we call it “all that is” is because by convention that presupposes that everything exists within it. Now I do not mean “it” to impersonalize it. It is at the same time everything simultaneously and it also has its own conscious awareness. Any aspect, or version of any particular culture’s or society’s “God” to us is all the same one “all that is.” Within the one “all that it,” since it is all that is, there is nothing that it is not.

Q: So, your God and my God are the same God?

Elan: Yes, although we may have different ideas of the attributes of it. Our understanding is we are all expressions and extensions of “all that is.” By convention, since itself is “all that is,” “all that is,” is unconditionally loving. It would not chop off portions of itself, and it understands everything to be a part of itself, and unconditionally, unconditionally, loves itself, and therefore everything in creation.

From our perspective, sometimes your society sometimes ascribes human attributes such as judgment and vengeance to “all that is.” To our way of thinking this does not make sense. Even your own literature says you are made in the image and likeness of God, not that God is made in the image in likeness of man and woman.

Our view of God is unconditionally loving. We have used in your vernacular the analogy that, therefore, “you can’t screw up.” You will always be loved by “all that is.”

Now, how you feel about yourself, and how you judge yourself according to your own notions of integrity is a difference story. “Judge not lest ye be judged” is a reflection of the idea that if you judge, you become the reflection of judgment, the expression of judgment and therefore can only attract opportunities to judge, and opportunities to be judged, but not by “all that is,” by you and the reflection of you. “All that is” loves you no matter what.

Q: You answered that beautifully and I am very thankful.

Elan: And to you as well for the beautiful question.

How do you view the Holy Grail?

Q: This question is a little more different than you usually get.

Elan: Alright. Always willing and able.

Q: Regarding the Holy Grail, the story of the Holy Grail, are you people familiar with it?

Elan: We understand the idea.

Q: In regarding the blending of the white light and dark side of the individual, or the female and the male part, or the positive and negative, in that blending are there any suggestions to look into it from your point of view or any help that can be shared at this time?

Elan: Well, the idea is, again, it is all you, all within you. As you expand your consciousness, you become more aware. In this particular reality, which has polarity, positive and negative, you will become more aware of the positive, but more aware of the negative as well.

But you don't need to experience the negative. It is simply that you may at first be more aware of it and that is part of the expansion.

From our perspective, negativity and negative aspects are forms of separation, which is not recognizing that you are all one thing. Judgment is one of the tools that can you use to maintain separation and negativity.

Positivity, and positive aspects, are from our perspective integration. Everything is a part of you, and beginning to act, that is the key, that way.

This begins to integrate the positive and the negative. You may be more aware of both but only need experience and to put out the positive, in that way.

Male and female energies don't need to be equated to positive or negative. If you use the definitions we have just provided, neither is negative or positive. They indicate the energies which exist in everybody. Though you may have a male body, you contain the idea of both female and male energy.

Your soul is both and neither at the same time. When you embody yourself in physical reality, you can physically become more of one, but you do not contain any less of the energy of the other.

Some individuals in your society will rigidly buy into the idea that they can only act in particular way and negate and not utilize the other energy.

Very simply rendered, female energy is simply receptivity, openness, intuition, and looking inward. Male energy is simply outflow, action, a certainty but not in an obnoxious way. That combination makes up a whole being. Is this addressing the question?

Q: Yes.

Is it safe to interact with you and your society?

Q: A part of me was feeling that it was not safe to be in your presence.

Elan: Alright. Do share.

Q: I wanted to know if you could validate for me that, yes, it is safe to be here with your energies and the other entities that are here with you. How safe is this? I don't know where this feeling is coming from other than someone had mentioned to me to....

Elan: [interrupts] "Surround yourself with white light." Is that the idea?

[laughter]

Q: Something similar to that, yes.

Elan: The idea is simply this, there is no outside. It is all a reflection of you. If you set up the protection, you set up the attack. If you have a fear that something can get you, what you are really saying, and what that aspect of fear is is that something that you do not prefer is most likely, which is the same as saying that you believe it.

So, this gives you an opportunity to establish within yourself exactly how much you believe you create your own reality. When you do not believe you create it 100%, which is literally true, then the notion arises that something can slip in there and get you.

I will leave it to your sense of discernment in interacting with our energy as to whether our energy in any way shape or form would be positive or negative. Our perspective is such that we never say. "This is the way it is." We never say, “Our way is the only way.” We never say that “what we are saying is better than what you are doing.” We simply share with you our perspective. We share with you our unconditional love and allow you to choose within your reality what will work for you and respect any decision you make even if it's to take off and never come back again.

You will get what you need from this interaction and if this style of interaction does not consciously seem to serve you, you will get what you need somewhere else.

The easiest answer to your question would simply be to listen to your own heart and to allow yourself to discern from what's before you, not from what anybody else has said, what you truly feel from our energy.

Q: I feel that I am safe with all that it is in with you.

Elan: Alright.

Q: I had allowed myself to go away from what I believed and what I felt because of what this person meant to me and what they said.

Elan: You have learned from it, and that, even that, has served you. Understand another perspective that we have is we are not intrusive. We are not obtrusive and certainly not invading. One of the reasons that we are interacting with your society in this somewhat unconventional way at this time is because we will only come “face to face,” so to speak, when we are invited. All of the extraterrestrial civilizations that are in contact with your own planet will only come on mass when invited. There is what you might loosely label from your science fiction literature a “non-interference directive” in full force.

Q: I understand.

Elan: The idea that we would choose to hone you in on is the need for protection. That, in and of itself, sets up the very attack. Remember it is all you. Now this does not mean that if you do not prefer or your discernment allows you to observe that you do not prefer something that you need condone it or participate in it, but you need not invalidate what you do not prefer.

Q: I see, and this is just a statement. The other night your name came to me in a dream. The very next day my friend said you were going to be here tonight, and I wasn't aware of that. I just felt there was a reason for me to be here tonight and to ask you these questions.

Elan: Oh, what a coincidence.

Q: Thank you. Yes, a coincidence.

Elan: Understand, by the way, synchronicity is the idea that all aspects of reality are aspects of one reality. Everything is all one thing, all interwoven. Nothing is extraneous or pointless. Coincidence need not mean by accident, though sometimes it is used in that way in your language. It can simply mean co-incidences, incidences occurring at the same time in perfect timing.

What you are participating in is synchronicity. However, in this case, we had a bit more direct contact with you in your dream, and you picked up on that.

Q: Thank you

Elan: And was that threatening?

Q: No.

Elan: Alright. Thank you very much for your willingness to share.

How can I be more compassionate?

Q: Hello

Elan: And to you. Greetings.

Q: I've just recently become in touch with aspects of myself that I was not in consciousness of before.

Elan: Oh! How exciting!

Q: Yeah.

Elan: Opening of few doors.

Q: And I'd like to know if you could give me some information on how to come more from my heart, to be more compassionate, and to be more patient.

Elan: It is quite simple. You just do it.

When you find yourself leaning in another direction or having another tendency to not be compassionate, look at it. That will serve you. It will allow you to see that "I wish to be compassionate; I wish to be loving in this moment; I do not feel either toward this individual, therefore, what must I believe to be feeling this way?"

Emotions are always a result of a belief, so you can always use your emotions rather than settling for "well, I just feel that way." You can always use your emotions to key you in to particular beliefs.

Does that make sense?

Q: Yes.

Elan: In terms of your opening up other aspects of yourself and communicating and bridging gaps within yourself and with others, our very simple suggestion would be to become quite clear in what it is you wish to explore.

Very pointedly compile, if you wish, questions and statements of interactions which you would like to understand and explore more. Dialogue with yourself and these portions of yourself. Make sure to leave space to listen for the answer. This will setup an energy flow or a dialogue. I will simply remind you that you cannot listen while you are speaking. If you will ask a question, listen for the answer.

Q: Sometimes, I don't listen.

Elan: Or, the other idea is you do listen; you do get the answer and simply invalidate it. So, begin to validate the answer as being the answer that you need at that time. When you do this, you open up the invitation to receive more communication. By saying, "Oh that's nonsense! I just made it up!" you shut the door.

Is there alternate universe with reverse polarity?

Q: Greetings again.

Elan: And to you.

Q: Could you tell me is there another universe the same as this one but a mirror universe reverse polarized in some way?

Elan: Yes.

Q: And if so, is it as real as this one?

Elan: Yes, and yes. Very good. It is an idea that is very valid, and you are peering into that mirror image universe when looking into your birth.

Would you like additional information of a specific nature along these lines?

Q: I had some intuitive input.

Elan: Alright. One moment. Recognize also that you cannot imagine non-existence. Think about it. Go ahead. Try. The idea being, that anything that you can imagine exists somewhere. Because of the parameters you place upon a particular dimensional reality, there may be more or less likelihood of it manifesting within that reality, but anything you do imagine does exist.

Validate your imaginings, imaging. Validate your intuition. Proceed.

Q: I would validate the concept that these two universes can interact at times inappropriately, creating problems—not problems, complications.

Elan: No. Although, again you have perceived it and created side or parallel universes when that does occur. May I point out to you this idea: that universe is just as used to itself as you are. If you want to spontaneously bi-locate to that universe you would perceive no change. You would still be within a structure that you are used to and not again perceive any change. You would not even notice that everything was, colloquially speaking, “backwards,” because in that universe it is forward. Do you understand?

Elan: Thank you, very much.

What happens after we die?

Q: The life-after-death question. I'm curious about what happens from the awareness that "I am" to the reincarnation stage? What's the process one goes through to decide, or whatever, to come back into the third dimension or whatever appropriate dimension?

Elan: Thank you very much. This will be a difficult idea to communicate. When you die or "physically translate," at that moment what you believe to be most likely about death is what you will experience.

In physical reality, there is a time lag between the belief and the manifestation. This is linear time. In your dreams as in death, there is no lag, and thoughts manifest instantly. You are a thought-form in a world of thought-forms. When you have a thought, the reality is immediately created. When you dream that is why you have a bit of difficulty keeping focused and your dreams fluctuate a lot. As you change your thought, the whole scene changes instantly.

When you first translate, what you believe to be most likely is what you will experience. When you incarnated into this physical life, you imposed a forgetfulness upon yourself. However, as you die, that forgetfulness softens, and you seem to merge with your higher self.

Because you are always one with your higher self, you are not actually merging. You remove the filter of the forgetfulness and then assimilate the explorations that you have undergone in the past life. At that point you exist within timelessness. Then, you make any "future" determinations as to what purposes you would still like to experience, still like to explore, and make again the designation for your "next destination," colloquially speaking.

Does that help?

Q: Yes, very much.

Elan: And to you.

How do I get more customers?

Q: I am having a hard time getting customers to sign up for my business. What can I do?

Elan: May I ask you a question?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Do you find yourself commonly thinking, “No one’s signing up. No one’s signing up. No one’s signing up?”

Understand the point?

Q: Yeah, I do.

Elan: Your clear intention is something that you establish and maintain. When you consciously create, you will come to a point where you have a choice. At that point, you can “listen to” the clear intention, or you can listen to the circumstances which run contrary to the intention.

Q: I see.

Elan: And that is the crux of this matter, to simply maintain that clear intention and allow yourself to visualize them signing up. And every time you find yourself saying, “No one’s signing up,” understand the universe takes you literally. When you say that, you believe it. You are stating that perhaps you do not intend to state it as a premise for the universe to fulfill, but the universe takes things quite literally. So, if you find yourself saying that, at least provide the reciprocal. You contain both beliefs: “no one’s signing up” and “it’s bustling at the seams.”

If you are going to constantly reaffirm the negative, at least follow up it up with a booster shock of the preference.

Q: On another topic...

Elan: [interrupts] One moment. Also, again realize that it is up to you to decide to allow your clear intention to be the feedback or the reality. The reality is a neutral set of props, and only when you assign the meaning that things are going contrary to your clear intention, then do you seem to create that apparency.

Q: Another aspect of that would be to trust in the timing.

Elan: Well, that is automatic for the timing always will be quite obvious. Either it is right there, or it is not. If it is not, obviously at that moment there is something else you can do which is more constructive towards your clear intention. That is the degree of trust that we are speaking of.

How can I get a job interview?

Q: I would like a job, and I am confident that if I get a face to face interview, I can convince them I am the right man for that job. How can I get an interview?

Elan: When I say everything is synchronicity, I truly mean it. In other words, if you get a job interview and you impress certain individuals, that is synchronicity, regardless of the outcome. I am not saying that the outcome will be unpreferred but whatever happens it is the result of you acting on your excitement with sincerity. If you interpret anything that happens to be positive and you act positively, you cannot fail in finding what you want. Do you understand?

Q: I think so. So, I will learn from the experience regardless of which way it goes. But it feels so right.

Elan: Well, no matter what happens, it will take you one step further. It is leading you toward something very exciting.

No matter what happens, nothing from this point forward is an interruption in the path you are on unless you assign and decide that it is. And in that case, you will hang yourself.

Be open. Acknowledge and allow what occurs to be perfect. And keep your eyes open for any peripheral opportunities.

An Essesani joke

Elan: Three Essesani are walking down the road. And two say to the third, "But you are always being of service to other individuals. You always do things for other people. What's in it for you?"

[long silence from the audience]

That was the punch line.

In our society, we realize that the serving of others is the serving of one-self.

Why am I choosing fear?

Q: I am choosing fear a lot at this point in my life and instead of fear...

Elan: [interrupts] By the way, when you do not act upon the fear, are you ignoring it, denying it, or invalidating it? If you are, then that is why it keeps coming back. Instead, when you feel it, dialogue with yourself saying something like, "I am surprised again."

Feel the fear and allow it to deliver the message. The fear represents something you are denying, a message you are refusing to pay attention to.

If you choose something else and deny and ignore the fear, you are actually reinforcing the fear through the attention placed upon it in denial.

When it comes up, it is coming up at a specific time for a specific reason, and trust in that, and realize that it means that now is the time to face it. Really feel it. "Oh joy! I will fear as much as I can."

You will see again very quickly it cannot overcome you, and it will deliver with it the definition and things you must believe that caused that fear. Then you can choose new beliefs.

Q: I guess I feel it to a certain point and then I...

Elan: Squelch it, before integrating and acknowledging it.

Q: I will tell you I thought I was allowing it, but maybe I'm stopping it.

Elan: Well, have you ever sat down and worked yourself up into abject terror?

Q: Oh! Of course!

[laughter]

Elan: Then you are doing it.

Q: Oh good.

Elan: But understand the point is not to simply do that and to leave it at that. Instead, ask yourself, "What am I are my definitions? What are my beliefs? What must I obviously believe to feel this way?" And while you are feeling that way it will be obvious.

Q: Well, I know that I've come to the realization that I am incapable of taking care of myself. That's a big one.

Elan: Well, that is a paradox. For you are already taking care of yourself.

Q: Right.

Elan: So, acknowledge where you already do. Use that as evidence and then continue to do so purposefully.

I want a car, but I can't afford it.

Q: Let's talk about cars again. This is where we were four months ago, last time I was here.

Elan: Well, not exactly.

Q: Well...

Elan: You are the new person now saying that you are in the same place making that decision. Go on.

Q: Okay. I am now absolutely by the fact that my car is falling apart, and I am seriously looking for a new car. My finances tell me that "you can't get a new car because you can't afford it."

Elan: One moment. Your what is telling you what?!

Q: My...

Elan: [interrupts] You are making a decision based upon certain evidence. Perhaps your checkbook is empty, but if you are an abundant person that will not talk you out of the fact that "I need a new car. I need one really soon. And I deserve and decide to get the new car."

Q: Well, my actions have shown that that must be my belief, because I go looking for a car and decide that I'm not going to buy a junky car because I deserve a car that feels good.

Elan: Alright. That is part of the process of feedback.

Q: Okay. So, I do that, and then the salesman tells me that it will cost so much money, and then I don't trust something, and I get scared.

Elan: Well, I remind you that you always trust something. You simply trust in the thing you don't prefer.

Q: Right.

Elan: Alright.

Q: And I cannot see how it's going to happen. I mean, I can continually say to myself, "I deserve," and lately I have a wonderful feeling of deservability.

Elan: As opposed to a lousy feeling of deservability?

[laughter]

Q: Yeah, well, that's right.

Elan: I'm playing with your language. Proceed.

Q: So, um, the problem comes in, in that my belief in deservability says, "Go in and buy this car." And then I say, "Well, how am I going to pay for this? But I deserve it, so I can do it. Well, I don't have a job. And I can't bring myself to find one or get one."

Elan: Well, how will you get there? Your car is falling apart.

Q: Okay. So, I say to myself, "I'm going to buy this car..."

Elan: If you were to act on what you feel very strongly about, which is a reflection of who you are, you would then possess a new tool, the car. That will allow you take the next step and express more of who you are.

Q: And trust that in fact that I will find a way to pay for it?

Elan: Well, if that is what you decide.

But perhaps you will decide to use that to do the next exciting thing. When you do that, you will have a new set of results and choices that excite you. When you realign to the decision that you are abundant, you will do that again automatically.

You do not need to fixate on how you will pay for it. When you say, "I'll be able to pay it. I'll be able to pay it. I'll be able to pay it," what you are really saying is, "I don't think I can pay it. I don't know how I can possibly going to pay for it."

[much laughter]

Q: So, I do get a sense that the decision to purchase the car that feels good is a way of empowering myself.

Elan: Oh, Alright.

Q: And I do have a sense that when I make that decision and take that action that it will be a very large leap in empowerment.

Elan: Alright. So, you are driving your way to higher consciousness. Yes?

[laughter]

Q: Okay. So that's all there is to it?

Elan: As they say in your society, "Happy trails."

How does an injury serve us?

Q: How do we deal with something like cutting our finger. Suppose it's bleeding, and it hurts a lot. Are you saying we are almost capable of not feeling the pain?

Elan: In a sense, yes, you can do that, but what we are suggesting is to first use even that exactly as it is. If you cut your finger and it hurts, look at it. Look at what it means to you. Look at what you would believe to have done it; look at how it serves you.

We understand that this is not the common approach in your society. Individuals do not scrape their knee and say, "How does this serve me?" However, if you begin to do so, and you begin to take ownership, you will notice patterns.

And when you find how something serves you, guess what? You can serve yourself in another way. And then you do not need to create that particular symbol to allow yourself to serve yourself.

To extrapolate on this, when you find something you label as dis-ease, you can simply look at it as a symbol. You are telling yourself something. If the dis-ease hangs around, you're not getting the message. Do not fixate on what seems wrong. When you get the message of what it has allowed you to do, what beliefs it has allowed you to hone in on, it will transform.

Once you do that, you will not need to create the symbol. When you establish what it is you are showing yourself, you will find through your creativity, that there are many, many, many non-traumatic ways to create the same effect.

If you will simply be willing to create that effect first, you will not then create the “need” for that particular symbol. Symbols like dis-ease, cutting yourself, and physicalized pain are symbols which you use to force yourself to look at something that you have refused to look at. Therefore, make it conscious, and choose to do it on purpose.

How do I live a joyful life?

Q: I'm left with the impression that the joy itself must be an end in itself in being alive. It must be one of the reasons that we would undertake to be alive in the first place. In other words, joy and excitement are purposes of life.

Elan: Perhaps that's one way to put it. Another way to put it is that you begin to allow yourself, without resistance, to act naturally which results in the idea of feeling comfortable, confident, motivated, self-assured, productive, and many of these other qualities which you say you desire.

Are we getting there?

Q: I think so.

Elan: If not, please ask. Clarifying these points is of assistance to all including myself.

Q: Well, in a sense when we say that we want to be motivated, to be relaxed, to be confident, and to be productive, those are our stated preferences. This seems to be just describing, for lack of a better word, a path?

Elan: A way, yes. Not the way. Not the only way, but a way, to synchronize yourself and align to your natural self and express yourself purposefully and fully, simply because that again is the most natural thing to do.

An automatic by-product of doing this and getting the results is what you call contentment. One might perhaps argue that the contentment does come first.

Q: Well, that might be the chicken or the egg.

What if I can't do what excites me?

Q: Sometimes I've been excited to do something like take a trip somewhere, and something will happen, so I'm not able to do it. I'll say, "Well, maybe I would've had a car accident on the way, or maybe something bad would've happened."

Elan: Alright. That is one way, one perspective, and you may use it.

We suggest that that comes from a somewhat negative standpoint. Instead think, "Where are you now because of this? What is available to you because you are here?" There are always unique opportunities to whatever place and time you are in. For instance, since you're home, what can you now do? You have been given an opportunity to be there.

By looking at it that way, you are taking back your creator-hood. You are owning it. You are then going a step further and gleaning, "What can I now do?" And you will find, invariably, that there is something there to be done that will very strongly aid and assist you.

If you do deny that here is not the best place to be and sit around saying, "Oh! Poor me! I really wanted to go," and then harp on that, you may not be allowing yourself to glean the opportunity.

"It's Alright. It will come around again anyway." But you can catch it the first time, by simply making the best of where you are at. You created being where you are, so "what does this now allow me to do?"

Q: It's very difficult when you're in the midst of it to say to glean the positive.

Elan: Ah! If you say so... [laughter] but recognize that it in and of itself is a definition, and again somewhat coming from the perspective of "poor me! I am too ill to glean the positive." It's just a definition.

In any given situation, you can allow yourself, not force, and not make, but simply allow yourself to view what is most obvious. Very often instead of seeing the obvious right in front of you, you look for something around some invisible corner.

In this case we sometimes ask, "Well, let's play a make pretend game. What might you have gotten out of it?" We immediately get answers. And those are the answers. Very obvious. Things that any given situation can allow you to do.

What can I do when I can't pay a bill?

Q: I've heard you mention that it's not what's happening in a given situation, but how we respond to the situation, that determines our reality.

Elan: Alright.

Q: When I'm holding a...Let's say I get a bill in the mail. Okay. I have a mental response that happens very, very quickly.

Elan: Alright. At that moment, stop. Simply file this into the categories we are discussing. You open an envelope. You perceive something, perhaps in this case a bill. You then have an interpretation which is what you are referring to as your response. To be very clear, call it your interpretation.

Your response is the thing you then do after you assess or interpret what that perception means to you. You can automatically respond and say any expletive that comes to your mind which is perhaps a negative response.

Or you can look at it more carefully, more creatively, and say, "Alright, Alright, Alright, I understand on the surface this seems negative. I understand that everyone knows this is negative, but I am a positive being. Even though there is the apparency that this is inherently negative, I know it is truly a neutral symbol. I know that what I assign as opposed to my initial interpretation is the only thing that determines the effect. It is not the piece of paper that has writing on it that gives the effect. It is my interpretation and proceeding to assign meaning to that interpretation."

If you take a moment to remind and realign yourself to who you have decided to be before you respond or act, which I assume includes the idea of being abundant, you are now doing something different.

When a symbol repeats itself, like receiving a bill, it is because you respond in a similar way each time. This is not simply about interpreting it differently, nor is it about simply viewing it more positively, it is about expressing and acting in a positive way consistent with who you have decided you are.

So, to continue with this example, simply pause before you respond. If someone is around, do not say anything to them. Realign yourself to who you are. A person who is abundant and knows they cannot pay the bill has a different response than a person who feels that they are not abundant. It is how you respond which seems to create the effect. If you don't have a similar response, you will change the momentum and the significance of the very bill we are discussing.

Q: Okay. I thought I had that. Guess not. [laughter]

Elan: May I assume that by that response that you do not understand or feel that what I am saying actually works?

Q: It's not perfect.

Elan: Alright, I understand that it may seem that way when you receive a bill that you feel you cannot pay; that in that moment, realigning to who you prefer to be cannot possibly pay the bill. However, your response sets up a new series of results. Those results may or may not have anything to do with paying the bill, but it does set up a new approach that will pay the bill.

Q: Okay. I understand what you're saying. I really do.

Elan: Alright. But what?

Q: I agree, I just am interested in the mental response. Because, only from my own experience, if I see an envelope and in the upper corner I see the little thing that says “Anyone who uses this gets fined $300 or imprisonment,” I know it’s from the IRS. Right?

Elan: Alright.

Q: There’s this feeling inside of me. I haven’t verbally said anything or really even created the thought. I just have this immediate response.

Elan: That is why we drew the distinction between what you perceive and how you react. That thing in the upper corner doesn’t create any results. It is the next step that creates the results in your life.

It is alright to have that initial interpretation. That initial interpretation reflects the actions that you performed up until now.

When you change your response and change your actions, no matter what the corner of the envelope says, you will be setting up a new template, a new series of events, and a physical reality whereby suddenly from some direction, often unexpected, you can pay it next time.

I understand that all of these things seem a bit removed, detached, and airy fairy, but when you begin to perform the positive response continuously, you will at some point begin to pick up a similar envelope--it’s never the same envelope--and not have that same initial interpretation. It is your tendency to act in a very similar manner each time you get the envelope that creates the propensity to interpret it in that way.

That is why doing something different, not hollowly, not on the surface, not to try to trick the universe, but because you refuse to be anything less than who you are in every situation. It is a completely different approach with completely different results and that changes or transforms your tendency to continue to interpret your reality in those negative terms.

To address this very specifically, if you have an initial negative interpretation, you don't need to judge yourself negatively and assume that you have failed and that you are not living on your joyous path. Acknowledge that it's okay to have that interpretation. You have always acted in a similar way in similar circumstances and so your interpretation is completely logical.

Let yourself have that interpretation, but do not settle for it. Do not allow that symbol to define you. Don't let it decide for you that [speaks boldly] "Well I thought I was so expanded; this envelope tells me I'm not." When you do that, your decision is that "I'm not abundant" and you trust in "I'm not abundant." In that case, the action cannot be anything but a direct reflection of the fact that you have decided that you're not abundant, and "see, here's the proof."

Q: Right.

Elan: Changing the action will change your tendency to interpret in that way.

Q: I love your response! [audience laughs]. Okay, we love your response.

Okay. Now I am going to have a different response. Before, I used to look at it and say, "Oh! Woe is me." And then after about maybe 30 seconds, I would say, [mockingly] "Wow! Isn't this a symbol of 'I'm abundant'? Oh yay! I'm abundant."

Elan: The way you are saying that still expresses that you are humoring yourself.

Q: I know that.

Elan: And that is vastly different from simply deciding because you know that is who you are and trusting it.

Q: Yeah. That's why I'm saying this is really great, very significant because I have been getting tired of saying, [mockingly] "Oh yeah! I'm abundant." [much laughter] And I didn't believe it. You know? I wasn't believing myself. And I was really frustrated with that. This is really perfect.

Elan: Perhaps, a more constructive approach would be to pick up the envelope and allow and welcome yourself to have any interpretation that you initially seem to have automatically. After all, you're going to anyway. Embrace it. Invite it. Then, before you do anything, ask yourself, "Who do I desire to be?" Not, [mockingly] "Oh yeah! I'm abundant," and yet in parentheses saying, "but here's the symbol that tells me this is all bull."

It's simply redefining, redeciding. "Alright. Alright. Here is a symbol I am definitely interpreting it as a reinforcement that I am not abundant. I acknowledge that. And I allow it. But I do not allow myself to continue to assign that meaning. Because this is the only control I have."

You are not doing this to taunt the universe but to assign who you are. "Alright I have this. It is an expression of who I am to be able to pay these as they come in, or better yet, before they come in."

When the bill comes, you can interpret it as a reflection that you are failing, or it can be a reminder that that is not what you wish to continue to create.

The sarcastic response you had is not fully committing to the positive decision. It still incorporates some of the atmosphere of "prove it to me, universe." You keep using the evidence to prove that "none of this works." [Sarcastically] "Yeah, I'm abundant. Sure." That's your decision.

Q: All joking aside, I really have decided that "I am abundant," and yet I still get to a place where I must not be believing myself.

Elan: Perhaps your approach, though constructive, has not been consistent, and from time to time in a fairly regular manner, you cave.

Q: What caves me?

Elan: You. You simply say, "Alright, the evidence is too overwhelming. I buy into this decision using the evidence," rather than perpetuating the decision of "who I am" continuously for again even three days of your time.

Q: Why would I personally choose to interpret this negatively so much?

Elan: Why would you?

Q: I've asked myself that.

Elan: Alright. Do you know?

Q: I do.

Elan: Each moment is anew. Why now do you do this?

Q: I want to discover this magnificent abundance that I am. Period. Anyway, that's what I imagine I do. I can feel that too, and yet it's still questionable to me why I really, really, leap so many hurdles in my life to really believe something.

Elan: Do you feel in the process of dialoguing with me about this question that your response is 100% consistently positive?

Q: I feel like asking the crowd. [Much laughing] I think...Well...What do I sound like? To my ears I hear something different than maybe they...What everyone else hears. So...

Elan: It is my perception, with no judgement whatsoever at all, that your response alternates. I am not saying this to criticize or judge you. Simply an observation. To make matters more interesting, you sometimes deny that. But there is nothing wrong with that either. Simply understanding that "I wish to be consistent. I will be consistent" is all it takes to change it all.

Q: I will be consistent.

Elan: Are you consistent now?

Q: Yeah.

Elan: Or will you be in the future?

Q: I am consistent.

Elan: Alright.

Q: That's all I need, right? Right?

Elan: Sometimes, people will use external circumstances to assess and see what it is that they are deciding. However, when you consistently respond positively, you will stop testing your decision. You do not need to use "well, everyone. What do you think?" to determine what you are deciding. Instead that can simply be an indicator.

Q: Yeah. Perfect sense.

Elan: Alright.

Q: This is really amazing. This has been a great gift, Elan.

Elan: It is the rule, rather than the exception, but I understand what you mean.

Q: That's great!

Elan: May I ask you one other question?

Q: Yes.

Elan: And feel free again to be honest or not. [much laughter and questioner pretending to walk away] I will never force you to be more of yourself.

Now I ask you this, and it is up to you to answer in any way you wish. I will take your words at their value, no matter what you say. Do you find yourself from time to time judging yourself? Yes or no.

Q: Yes.

Elan: Alright. That also is an indicator that you are not always responding positively. You don't need to judge yourself negatively for not always responding consistently positively. You can transform this Alright now by using that aspect and understanding. While you're judging yourself, chances are the next thing you do won't necessarily be very positive.

When you find that you are judging yourself, you can transform it by simply saying, "Alright, Alright, Alright. I'm judging myself. But I do not wish to continue to do so. I understand that I have done something that is apparently not constructive and have judged myself for that and then acted from the atmosphere of that judgment. But I can simply observe that I have done that, see that it has not gotten the positive result, not do that again, and actually thank that very same action for me allowing me to realign rather than judging myself."

When you judge yourself for judging, you compound it, and so simply say, "Alright, Alright, Alright. I judge myself I have the option to love myself unconditionally, to love myself conditionally, or to love myself not at all. Which looks most attractive?" Realign.

Q: I understand that. Hopefully, I'm trusting we will never talk about this ever again. [much laughter] Because when I do judge myself, I will do that. See? [much laughter]

Elan: You can use it all. And what can happen is that we can talk about it again when you are giving your testimonial, but then on from the positive.

It is alright to judge yourself. Judgment can be something that lasts but a fraction of a moment. Reminding yourself that you love yourself no matter what can also be a fraction of a moment.

All the indicators are there. All your interpretations may seem automatic initially, but it is the response which will create an effect and which will transform it all. Different responses will create different interpretations.

When you begin to walk in step with who you know yourself to be, when you have that negative interpretation, you will no longer judge yourself. And if you “cave,” big deal. Don’t harp upon it. Unless you wish to carry around and perpetuate the results of the judgment.

Q: Understood.

Elan: Alright.

Q: Thank you very much.

Elan: You could sound a bit more excited about it.

Q: I’m very excited. I’m excited to get the change I’m really looking for.

Elan: Ah!

Q: I’m sitting here, and I feel my head is about to explode.

Elan: Perhaps again, this is a bit too simple, but this is the level at which we choose to communicate. Consolidation, simplification. Again, as I have said, decision, trust, and action are really one thing. And for now, simply stay focused.

Your action is the expression of your decision and your trust in any given moment. And that is what you can control. That is what you have the choice to express in any moment no matter what.

What can I do when people judge me?

Q: The other day people were judging me. What can I do about it?

Elan: Even if they were, so what? They can only be judging you if they are judging some level of themselves.

If they were completely, 100%, unconditionally self-loving, they would have no tendency to judge anyone. Even if they didn't understand the motives of others, they would understand that whoever the person is and whatever it is she is doing, she does have her own right, and she does have her own reason to do that.

All judgment is a reflection of self-judgment. When you do not buy into the judgment and create your own vibratory version of it, it has no effect on you.

If you find yourself buying into the judgment, it is a simple matter to remind yourself, “wait a minute, the opposite thought of this is unconditional self-love. The definition of unconditional self-love is I love myself no matter what. End of conversation.”

What is laughter?

Q: What is laughter?

Elan: Laughter is positive expression of center-ness. When you laugh, you do not laugh alone. The many other beings, the many other entities should you need to be aware of them, and often you will not, laugh with you. That is the level at which you may all share, always throughout, infinity. The light feeling of laughter will always be of assistance, always be a tool through which you can express yourself and allow others to identify with you positively.

I am afraid of a business relationship.

Q: I have a situation in which I'm being invited to get involved with a business association and with people that I'm not sure about. Every time I think about going into business with them, I get terrible feelings--fear riveting through my body, and...

Elan: Alright. Do you sense that the fear is a perceptive intuitiveness, or that something that you do not prefer is most likely to happen?

Q: That's what I'm trying to decide. Is my fear committing to any work, or is it just reality that this is a dangerous situation, and my body is saying, "Don't." I don't think I should have such a horrible feeling every time I think I'm gonna get tied up with them. You know?

Elan: Well, first of all, whatever you feel is what you feel. Allow yourself at first to feel that, rather than it should be this way or that way.

Close your eyes. Sit up straight. Breathe deeply.

What is the first thing that comes to your mind in terms of is this fear specific to your intuitive knowledge of the situation or is it overall fear? What is your first perception? Most strongly?

Without hesitation, answer.

Q: With other people, I wouldn't have the fear.

Elan: Ah! Now, this tells you in no uncertain terms that that is the case. Now, are you going to allow your actions to be reflective of what you know to be true for yourself?

Q: Well, it's going to be tricky to get out of the situation because I feel very...It feels as though I'm being led into a lion's den. So I...To extricate myself, it's going to be a bit detached.

Elan: Do you understand that being "led" implies following, and following implies you are on your own volition, your own control and choosing to follow.

Q: Right.

Elan: Meaning you can turn around.

Q: I've been following, and I want to turn around.

Elan: Oh.

Q: And they are also very needy, and I want to help them so it's out of obligation or compassion that I feel like I'm walking into this den.

Elan: Do you feel that doing something for them instead of allowing them to do it for themselves is truly fulfilling a need, or is it creating a new sense of need?

Q: Yeah. It's creating a sort of dependency.

Elan: Alright. So, therefore, what you are saying is not truly what you are providing them. So, now what will you do? For this is the bottom line.

Q: Now I'm going to make that decision and do it gently.

Elan: Well, you just have made the decision. Now, are you willing to embody it? And if you feel that your approach in doing so is gentle, all well and good. That is your compassion. With empathy you can feel what they are feeling without feeling sorry for them.

However, if that empathy devolves into sympathy, you are feeding their own feelings of disempowerment. You are agreeing with them that they do not have their own power. You are saying, "You can't do it; you need me." Sympathy is at least in this sense, not a constructive acknowledgement of not only your own power but their power as well. If when you assist them, it merely continues to create a need, it is not truly fulfilling any need. They don't learn to stand on their own two feet, so to speak, and grow if they choose to.

Now what will you do?

Q: I wonder how much to do for them before I walk away from the situation. And there's something else because--does it mean that once I love myself enough I can walk away and won't create these situations? Does it have something to do with that?

Elan: Absolutely, but you already love yourself enough. Simply be willing to remind yourself in moments where you doubt that that is so.

Also, remember that when you doubt that, that is not a lack of faith, that is having faith in something else. Perhaps it is that you don't love yourself, and you get to choose once you realize that where you wish to place your faith and trust.

Fundamentally, you already love yourself. You have simply decided that there are conditions which you must meet before you will express that love. You can remove those conditions. It is up to you. You can completely unconditionally express self-love and it doesn't have to be at the expense of someone else.

In fact, unconditional self-love automatically increases your ability to unconditionally love someone else. In most cases, unconditional love for someone else is fully allowing them to be who they are choosing to be. It is about allowing them to experience what they are choosing to experience.

You are demonstrating that you believe in their own power and that they can handle it. You are detaching yourself from being responsible for them. You cannot choose how they will think or act, and instead you are giving them the opportunity to learn to be responsible for themselves rather than take a disempowered approach.

Q: And then I'm thinking of lending them or giving them a car so they can do their work separate from me and that seems like an unnecessary... You know...

Elan: From my particular perspective what you are saying sounds like you feel guilty, which is disempowering to yourself and them.

If you are wanting to do it because you love them, and it brings you excitement and joy, then you are doing it out of self-love and love of them. If you are doing out of, shall we say, shame and guilt, then everyone is being disempowered.

Q: So, then they're on their own in this. They might seem stranded, but they'll deal with it, right? Is that right?

Elan: Well, they dealt with it this far using you. Therefore, either they will attract a similar symbol or have the opportunity to begin to do it themselves.

But you can leave them on their own in your full integrity with an unconditionally loving overtone. If you are doing it for an empowering reason, you are doing them the greatest service possible within the circumstances. If instead, you allow them to perpetuate their disempowerment, they will continue to express that.

How do you validate the beliefs of others?

Q: Today, I was talking with a dear friend who is a real bible-thumping Christian and... [much laughter] And he really believes in sin and a judgmental God and everything. I wanted to do what you said, which is to honor his point of view and love him for where he is, but I found myself feeling defensive and kind of almost getting argumentative with him about it.

Elan: Oh. Alright.

Q: And I left the conversation feeling unhappy.

Elan: Well, that is a prime example, however, of where you're at. This is also an opportunity to decide and look at "Alright. Interesting. I got defensive. What a surprise! Where is the thing that's hanging me up? Where do I not believe what I am saying?" Is it obvious to you at what point you do not believe what you are saying?

Q: I don't know. I seem to believe the concepts you espouse completely, but there must be some place of doubt inside of me.

Elan: Yes, and where is that? And again, doubt is not a lack of trust, doubt is trust in something you say you do not prefer.

Q: I think the doubt comes in from the fear of what other people will think of me by discussing these concepts.

Elan: Well, if you're only willing to remain positive, what's the worst that they can think?

Q: Um...

Elan: [in an exaggerated mean tone] “Oh! He sees through rose-colored glasses!”

Big deal.

[much laughter]

You have performed a service. However, you still have, to some degree, an underlying idea that what you are saying is perhaps better than what he is saying.

Q: Yeah.

Elan: That is Alright. You can remind yourself that all realities and all truths are equal, by at least acknowledging that you contain it.

Simply re-acknowledge, remember, and recollect that it is Alright for him to think that. The point was not to turn him around. And whether he turns himself around or not is not a commentary on the power of your ideas.

You have given him a gift, and it is up to him to do whatever he wants with it. It might even reinforce his point of view. Nevertheless, you have still been of service to him. It just may not be according to your point of view.

Q: How do I love him and feel comfortable being with him when I can see that his belief systems is causing us pain?

Elan: “All that is” allows you to explore and think anything you want. You can emulate that perspective. Where possible, you can provide a loving alternative with no insistence on him accepting it. You can then be a living example once again of what you are speaking of.

He is not blind, and he will eventually see that it is working for you. Perhaps he might even ask you some questions.

But the harder you push, the more his defenses will go up. The defense isn't a receptivity to anything at all. That does not allow what normally might be considered a sound idea by him to even get in.

Your willingness to not insist and your willingness to simply state with love and with peace in your tone is the greatest opportunity that he will even get to look at it.

You are now able to approach him from this perspective incorporating what you have felt and reminding yourself that what he believes is completely equal and he has the completely equal right to explore his perfect version of whatever misery he has created.

Again, that is his choice.

You wanted to validate him, and that is validation. From your point of view, you are allowing both global and individual transformation by saying through your action, "I have a way, you may wish to use it. It has certain advantages but it is not the only way, and your way is just as valid." You begin global transformation in one particular interaction between individuals. So, thank you.

Q: Thank you.

What is the action stage of decision-making?

Q: The action stage of decision-making. I'm not quite clear what that stage is.

Elan: Alright. To keep it quite simple, let us review the process. First, you make a decision about who you are. You are doing this all the time either consciously or unconsciously. In the way you are asking the question, we are assuming you mean conscious decision-making.

Second, you then trust in that decision, and that that decision is representative of who you are.

And lastly, you take action which is what you are referring to. Action is what registers your decision in physical reality. In action, you are receptive to opportunities and are willing and do act on those opportunities.

Q: I don't want to go back to the old way. I want to make sure my decision sticks.

Elan: Well, again, being the new way, not not being the old way. Here's where the difference comes in. When you make the new decision, new circumstances will arise. There will be new opportunities in which you will have the opportunity to act. It is up to you to be open to seeing the opportunities and acting upon them. Do what those opportunities afford.

Q: I guess what I'm asking is, at the end when the decision is made, and the action stage comes into play, are there universal energies or probabilities?

Elan: When you make the new decision, your whole reality shifts. You will attract things that support the decision, and this will show up as what we would call opportunities. Acting on those opportunities expresses the belief and creates the physical changes you say you want. Those actions will generally be things you can do, or say, and they ultimately have you move your body and do something.

Q: That would make sense.

Elan: For now, that will do as an explanation.

Q: Thank you.

Elan: When you make the decision, new opportunities will arise. When you know this, this will change your attitude to one of positive acceptance and excitement. "Ah! Opportunities are forthcoming!" Which is something you say you enjoy.

Therefore, another aspect of being the you you wish to be is being completely engaged and committed to your decision and act on the opportunities as they come up.

Perhaps, with the old decision you would see an opportunity and not do it. But your new decision doesn't leave room for that, for you are productive, you are active, or whatever your decision entails, that allows you to energetically move through your reality.

Perhaps, at first it may feel as though you are motivating yourself to act on the opportunity. But that is short lived. Fairly immediately and even directly immediately if you allow it, the opportunities will simply be so compelling, so overwhelming, so attractive, so doable, and so effortless for you because they are opportunities that represent who you choose to be. There will simply be no question this is "what I need to be doing. Period." That is the action.

What is my mission?

Q: Do you have any coaching or insight about my mission?

Elan: The only suggestion we have to make the information come more easily to you is to simply remain as grounded as possible about it. What that means is that you should acknowledge that you wish to be more aware of opportunities and immediately engage in the opportunities when they become apparent.

Be receptive to opportunities by stating to yourself, “I wish to attract opportunities.” That is the beginning. The midpoint is the moment the opportunity presents itself. The timing of that moment is very significant. That’s when as they say in your society that you should “land with both feet running.” It doesn’t need to be effortful and laborious. Behind the opportunity is the inspiration and the motivation to act upon it.

Does what I do affect others?

Q: When I do something, does it directly affect someone else or only my version of someone else?

Elan: Your version of someone else. If they choose to participate with you, then it will affect them. You will see this in their reaction to you.

When you offer what you have to someone else, it is simply a gift, and they always have the ability to do with it what they choose. That choice is that individual's alone, and the choice they make will determine the effect they get out of it.

You cannot be responsible for them in any way because you cannot make decisions for another individual. Only they get to choose how they will think and act...

Does that help?

Q: Yes, it does. So, what we do doesn't affect everyone else? It's up to them to choose?

Elan: It affects them by giving them more options, alternative thoughts, and other perspectives. These will be different from the way they commonly think and create their reality. It's an opportunity for them regardless of what they do with it. It's an opportunity for them to grow and expand their awareness.

Q: But it's always everyone's choice what affects them?

Elan: Yes, sometimes unconsciously, but as they become more conscious, then they can choose it consciously.

How is each time the first time for you?

Q: Quite often you tell us that each time is the first time for you.

Elan: Yes

Q: I would imagine that if I asked you the same question 100 times in succession it would become quite tedious to you. So, apparently, I don't understand what you mean by that.

Elan: From our perspective it would not be very tedious. From your perspective, you may find repetitive acting tedious.

However, we see every moment as new. In every given moment, you are the not the same person asking the same original question. I see you as constantly changing. I never bored by you because you are not the same individual. You recreate yourself each moment.

In each moment, you learn and take in information which gives the appearance of growing and knowing more and more. It is an illusion. You've always known it all and imposed a forgetfulness upon yourself to experience this degree of focus. Therefore, you never actually learn anything, simply remember what you already know.

How do I help others?

Q: What is the best way to share what you are sharing with us and to communicate with others so that they can benefit?

Elan: Be an example. If you truly believe what you are saying and wish to share, then it will be effortless for you to be an embodiment of it. And again, when people will see “Oh my goodness! I've heard people say that but look at her, she actually does it! Look at her. She's right there. I can see her. I can feel her.”

That is a strong opportunity for them if they choose to see it. Imagine what it is like for you when you see someone embodying something that you wish to embody. It is an opportunity for you to learn, but only if you choose to.

You can never force anyone to choose anything. You can simply present it and if you believe in the power of the idea that you are presenting you don't need to argue. It simply carries its own load.

Q: That's good for people who see me, but I'm writing a book, so people won't see me.

Elan: Well, perhaps you can incorporate some of your own experiences as examples of what you are sharing.

Q: Okay. Thank you.

Is controlling my reality the same as creating it?

Q: Is control the same thing as our creating? In other words, what be the same...I- I feel like you can't control anything really. I can't control what I'm going to feel five minutes from now, what's going to happen to me five minutes from now, but is it...

Elan: What do you mean by the word "control?" Does control mean force? Does it mean having things be exactly as you want? Does it mean melding it or forming it in some exact way? That is one form of control.

When you define "control" in that way, that implies that you are not in control and that you need to force something or have something conform as evidence that you are in control. When you do that, you set up resistance which you then also have to overcome as external evidence that you are in control. Instead, understand that you are already in control. Allowing is expressing your control.

Part of the particular reason that you chose this style of reality, in which you have forgotten that you created it all, is so that you can experience the unfoldment and joy of discovery. This is an allowance. This is also trust in the timing.

Often, when people feel out of control, they are simply insisting upon a particular timing as the only way that it can occur and the only way that they will accept it. When it does not come at the time they expect, they decide that they are out of control and have not gotten their way.

You can trust in the timing by simply saying, "This is my intention. It is my clear intention, therefore, because I desire it, because I am excited about it, it is a representation of who I am. If I am simply willing to blatantly be who I am, it will come along and manifest because I say so, and it is a representation of who I am.” You will find that the timing is important and that that timing had a particular advantage that was more preferable.

So basically, what we are discussing here is trust. Trust the timing and allow rather than try to dominate.

Does that answer the question?

Q: Yes, that helps a lot.

Do you not have fear, anger or sadness?

Q: On your planet do you have no fear, no anger, and no sadness? Do you have just total unconditional love?

Elan: Yes. We do not experience the negative emotions in quite the same way as you.

As you allow your negative emotions, you will find you discover the beliefs behind them. Those beliefs are generally disempowering ones that lead to fear, helplessness, and anger. Once you recognize that, you will simply choose not to believe in them any longer. And when you no longer believe in them, you will no longer experience those types of emotions.

Another important point to understand is that you do not need to feel bad in order to feel good. There is sometimes the view in your society that you need the negative emotions in order for the positive ones to stand out in relief. Or perhaps that you need to have some misery before you can appreciate happiness. Yes, that is true, but that is not the only truth.

What I am getting at is that we are not bored, nor is our happiness diminished because we don't have negative standards by which to weigh them against. We simply revel in ecstatic joy. That joy has many nuances and a great degree of emotionality but none with a negative interpretation.

We also have not one little bit of doubt in our consciousness. We are always 100% committed to what we are doing. We understand that only we can attract a representation of who we are. We are always firmly ready and willing to dive into whatever we create for we know that there are jewels to be discovered within any exploration.

How can I be more decisive?

Q: I need some assistance; I'm having a hard time being decisive on exactly what to do because I have so much going on in my life right now.

Elan: You are having quite an easy time being decisive. You are simply not deciding according to what represents who you are. You are deciding something else. You always decide, you always commit each and every one of you always do. What we are speaking of is consciously beginning to decide according to preference and excitement with integrity. There is no "rustiness in this deposit" for you already always decide.

Q: Well, I'm interested in tonight when I go to sleep figuring out those problems.

Elan: Then go right ahead. And we are not being patronizing. That is how simple it is. Simply utilize what we are speaking of in the moment, and it will just be obvious and provide whatever proof you need to continue to do so.

How precise should I be in manifesting?

Q: When one is insisting on being precise in manifestation, is the limiting factor how precisely one registers their requests, or is the universe just going to comply to those requests?

Elan: The more parameters you impose the more you are saying you will only accept a particular thing, and you are not being open to all the other things which may present themselves as options.

How can I not be affected by others' negativity?

Q: We are telepathic creatures who can feel the negative beliefs of others, and considering that those negative belief systems can impinge on the nervous system...

Elan: No, no. Who told you that? That is a belief which, yes, which has evidence which will accompany it, but that is not the way it is. That is a way that it is, but not the only way.

In other words, I may be aware of negativity that individuals are exploring in your reality, but I do not feel that negativity because it is not my belief. I have an awareness of it but it has no effect on me. In fact many times my particular orientation is so positive in terms of beliefs, emotions, thoughts, and actions that I merely take your word about the negativity on your planet. I have no experience with those feelings, and I always see you from the empowered viewpoint.

I always see you choosing to explore negativity because you have so much power to even begin to think about it. As a result, I don't feel sorry for you, nor sympathy, nor am I dragged down by you, nor "my vibes" affected by you.

I will see you as empowered and admire your courage because of the degree that you are willing to explore and experience negativity. But that doesn't have any effect on me until I say so, and then it does.

You can feel the negativity if you buy into that. On the other hand, if you are focused on seeing the empowered version of yourself and others, then you can simply maintain a compassionate awareness of their negativity, and also you are then of great service to them if they choose to see it.

Do proceed if this is not clear.

Q: It is clear. Um...

Elan: Does it sound too simple or too good to be true?

Q: No. I guess I have a belief system which makes me open and vulnerable to the pain in others. I feel the pain that exists.

Elan: You can only feel the pain if you contain a belief that would allow you to feel that pain. So, if someone else is creating negativity and you perceive it and you feel it, the point is that you have an issue. It means that you have, very creatively through an external circumstance that you label "them," given yourself an opportunity to see a belief you have and have not looked at.

When you are clear about what you believe and when you have acknowledged that all the negative beliefs that no longer serve you and replace them with positive beliefs, you will no longer match that feeling that they have with the same feeling.

When you find the positive empowered beliefs for yourself, you will also more clearly be able to embody and see options for others, whether they choose to express them or not. You will know there is a more preferable way for them. Your experience as a result will be positive because you know they have clear options and are not limited by those beliefs other than if they choose to be.

If you do feel negativity it is simply an advantage and opportunity to see where it applies to you.

Remember you are the universe, everything within it is you. You do not literally feel someone else's energy. You create your own version of that energy and express and experience that.

Even when you say, "Elan, well I feel your energy," that's not what's happening. You are matching my energy. You can only feel your own energy. Allow this to be a window to your soul, a window to the belief you still contain that you no longer prefer.

Often your belief will be, "Well, everyone has to have some negative experience to balance out the positive." It's Alright to believe that, but that's not the only way. You cannot change it until you acknowledge that you do. And you cannot acknowledge that you believe anything until you accept that "it's Alright to believe that."

Is this getting to the issue?

Q: Yes. So, on your planet, you and others connect telepathically. You actually unite on the level of shared experience?

Elan: What I left out was that not one single individual on my whole planet chooses to experience negativity. They are simply gradient variances of positive experience. That is what allowed us to become telepathic.

Q: Are you capable of experiencing another's experience?

Elan: Again, no. You create your version of it. And the more accurately you do that, the more it seems that way, but that is the extent of it.

As I have begun saying, telepathy is not reading someone else's mind; it is empathically connecting with them so much that you function and identify completely as them. When you function completely as them, you create similar thoughts at the same time. You attract similar thoughts, but it's your energy and your thoughts. They can seem to be the same.

This is similar to what people experience on your planet when they say that they are “in love.” They seem to know what each other is about to say. They are so in synchronous harmonic vibrational resonance that they create similar thoughts at the same time.

Knowing how this works gives you power. Otherwise, you may think someone else can impinge upon you, and as a result you might then create the excuse that you can’t exercise your own power because someone else has it. In other words, you might say that because they are feeling negative then you are powerless. You are basically saying that they get to decide whether you are empowered or not.

From the overall fundamental foundational viewpoint that you create it all, which you do, your powers of creation are so vast (though this may sound paradoxical) that you can actually create the apparency that you don’t create it at all. That is not lack of power; that is complete power and the complete courage to play out that reality.

What is frustration?

Q: What is frustration?

Elan: Frustration is not being in the moment. You are not using the moment to your full advantage. You are creating a “what if” scenario to look back or forward to a different time at the cost of what’s present in this moment.

You don’t need to be frustrated. Simply, when you feel that, remind yourself, “Well! How interesting! I’m frustrated. Must not be in the moment. Alright. Push that aside. What is right in front of my face? Look at that! This excites me.” You’re back in motion. No frustration.

You have hit upon something that is also quite helpful. When you consider that you can create a life that excites you and that motivates you, when you are excited about excitement itself, that is also a good sign because it means that that rings true for you.

Frustration is Alright. It is a sign that you are analyzing yourself out of the moment.

Is shame the same as guilt?

Q: Talking about blessings in disguise, I've been having a really hard couple of months. Peeling away a lot of layers of hurt and anger, I had a lot of physical difficulties; I've had headaches; I've had intestinal gripes, and I'm getting really annoyed at this whole process.

Elan: Oh.

Q: But I'm beginning to see how it serves me, and it's come all the way back to two words, and one of the times you said the opposite of love is not hate but um...

Elan: Guilt.

Q: Guilt.

Elan: Yes.

Q: Self-invalidation. What about shame? Does shame...

Elan: It's similar. Guilt and shame are interchangeable terms. In general, it is not that you have done something which you do not prefer, it is that you are strongly judging yourself about it.

Once you realize that you have done something that you do not prefer, you can do something different. That can be the end of it.

Your resolve that "I will no longer do this"--particularly knowing how it makes you feel--will give you at some point an opportunity with a similar situation to do something different.

Is this the same as the law of attraction?

Q: Could you compare the law of attraction to the universal law that what we put out is what we get back. Is the law of attraction the same as what you share?

Elan: In a sense they are identical. Basically, it can be summed in the statement that you can only experience a reality that you are the vibration of.

When you establish the referential preferential, you, as we talked about in the book, decide consciously what you wish your vibration to be. In that exercise, you create for yourself a projection in your imagination of the vibration you wish to be. If you act according to that, you will change what you attract and it will be immediately obvious.

Is someone I'm attracted to attracted to me?

Q: Given this law of attraction, it seems to me, for example, in dealing with other humans, and let's be specific here, if I find that I'm very attracted to another female then I can assume that like attracts like, and therefore that feeling will probably be returned?

Elan: Well, in a sense, you are reading, shall we say, many things into the situation.

If you are attracted to someone, you can allow yourself to interact with them in whatever way is available. That maybe is the point of the attraction in itself. You don't need to assume or be responsible for how they feel and what is attractive to them.

Use the fact that you are attracted as a message which says something like, "Well, obviously it's something to explore." It doesn't need to be anything more than that. Be open-minded and conscious as you explore it. Either what you are saying will be obvious itself, or you will derive something else which will then fulfill why you are attracted to them in the first place.

The way you described it you can easily setup an expectation scenario which will also often setup the disappointment as well. This is because you have assumed you know the exact reason for the attraction which then in a sense gives you tunnel vision and does not allow you to remain open to see why you are actually attracted to this person.

Q: So, as someone else mentioned, "Allow it to unfold."

Elan: Yes, but at the same time understand that what you are attracting is a reflection and an opportunity to explore. It is not about one person who will make you complete. That idea has the underlying premise that you are not complete.

Q: It could also be the reverse, right? That maybe people are really interested in you and you have too many people to deal with.

[laughter]

Elan: Well, Alright. If you wish to call them problems then perhaps you will get that effect. However, you can revel in that as well.

Q: As an opportunity.

Elan: Yes.

Q: Thank you very much.

How do I deal with pain?

Q: I would like clarity or some methodology to transform some pain in a moment. Let's say I experience it as I stub my toe, and it hurts a lot, and I say, "I am a perfectly healthy human being, and I am not experiencing pain," or, "I'm experiencing pain. Oh wow. It hurts." And then...Can I transform it in that moment?

Elan: Absolutely.

To keep it simple, the idea is this. In your society there is a tendency when you have pain to assign a linear cause. You tend to assign a purpose, a cause, or some initiating factor, and then, you continually refer back to that cause and recreate the pain from that "event."

This takes the general form of statement, "Oh! There's that pain again." Another approach would be to say, "Here is a completely new moment. I am experiencing the sensation. The sensation may be similar to sensations I experienced before, however I know I create my reality 100% in each and every moment therefore one other way to look at it is that it is something different. Now, how does this serve me?"

Instead, allow yourself to experience it. Focus on how it is of service to you. Listen to what it is telling you. Ultimately this will help your decision about who you are be reestablished.

Q: It seems sometimes that the pain is interfering and distracting from being able to focus on whatever its message is.

Elan: Understood, but again it is along with that bag of assumptions that you say, "Here comes that pain," and you give that pain a birth, an infancy, a childhood, an adolescence, and eventual demise. You treat it as if it a continual single source event which it is not.

Can we heal instantly?

Q: I had my hand smashed in a door, in a car door. I shut the door on my hand and smashed all my fingers. Something told me that it's okay. I just pulled the fingers out shook them out and it was done.

Elan: Did you picture broken fingers or fixed ones?

Q: Fixed ones.

Elan: Ah! Often when people create pain, they will visualize that portion of their bodies in a disease state. This is one of the things that actually creates the dis-ease state.

I suggest, as you have demonstrated, that when you feel physical pain or an unpleasant sensation to see it as an opportunity.

“Well, how is that an opportunity?” you might ask.

Well, I'll tell you!

You can very specifically direct your attention to that area and, when you do, you have the option of envisioning that portion as being perfect.

When you feel pain and you attach to it a disease, you then create a disease counterpart. You can use the pain to pinpoint where to picture perfection and a perfectly functioning organ.

This is one of the ways in which people will create disease. They use pain as evidence that there must be disease and then use visualization unintentionally to create it.

Do you understand the difference?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Therefore, if it hurts, picture it well. If it still hurts, go to the doctor.

[much laughter]

Now I say this jokingly, but keep in mind that you will function through your most bought-into belief system.

If you believe that the doctor is the only way that you will reconcile that situation, then that symbol will allow you to take back your power and take the steps to get better. But remember the doctor is only a symbol.

The doctor says, "Do this. Do this. Do that, and then it will get better." You believed him. You give the power to him or her. You give the power to that symbol. But you do the healing and basically use that as an excuse. In any case, at least acknowledge what your strongest belief system is.

If you do what I have described here in regard to your heart, and visualize it as perfection, often any pain will subside. And then going to the doctor will not be necessary.

But continue to acknowledge what you do believe. That is the only way to change any belief or express a different belief. You must first acknowledge the belief you already have.

Thank you for allowing me to illustrate that.

Q: Does that work on a broken bone in the body?

Elan: Well, yes. Once you understand and express the belief that it does, it works. However, many people will see that as unlikely. Nonetheless, you get to get in touch with whether you believe it or not.

Q: Something like on Star Trek?

Elan: What do you mean? I do not watch Star Trek.

[much laughter]

Q: The New Generation. The uh...He broke a bone and she put the machine on it and did a little bit of light, and the next you know it's all fine.

Elan: One moment. Allow me to access this from another point of view.
[pause]

Ah. From my perspective, yes, that light instrument would be the symbol which the individual used to heal themselves. Yes.

Q: So that's possible?

Elan: Absolutely. Anything.

Q: Thank you.

Elan: Well, the question is: what will you choose from the multiplicity, the infinity of possibilities? Choice enters in. This is creator-hood. Creator-hood is no longer saying, "Life happens to me." Creator-hood is accepting and embodying and insisting that life happens through me and from me. And that is a choice. Each one is.

What can I do about procrastination?

Q: I'd like to start a business to help people find a job, and I think that that is following my excitement, and so I would like to do it...

Elan: Don't try; simply do it.

Q: Okay. I've been socialized to fear the future, to please other people, and basically to not follow my...

Elan: Oh! Very good! Thank you very much! Think of how much time you have just saved yourself by owning those beliefs.

Do go on.

Q: Those beliefs are leading to procrastination, and I'm wondering how I can just stop.

Elan: You are acting as a person who has those beliefs. Quite obvious. Therefore, to change them and act like a person who has the new beliefs. That person will not have procrastination in their arsenal.

Q: It seems I've spent 33 years of my life...

Elan: Then you are a new person speaking of a transformation.

[much laughter]

And you may have another 33 or 66 if you wish to be that which you prefer, by being willing to validate who you truly are, and not accepting any social invalidation. For when individuals invalidate you, you do not in that sense feel it until you buy into their invalidation.

When will you do what you have said?

Q: Well, I'd love to do it right now.

Elan: Go right ahead. It is that simple. And may I say just do it.

Q: I can do it.

Why am I not abundant?

Q: There are opportunities in my life. The clients are coming in and everything, but I'm not getting the abundance [scoffs and a frustrated tone]. But I am abundant [sarcastic tone].

Elan: What is your perception of what you are not getting?

Q: Um...

Elan: Where do you allow your circumstance to talk you out of your decision that you are indeed abundant? When you state, "I am abundant, I am abundant, I am abundant," it is more a desperation to talk yourself into it. Instead, you can decide that you are abundant, maintain that decision, and then allow the reality to reflect that even if does not initially appear to.

Q: Well I'm obviously saying it out of fear when I'm saying, "I'm abundant. I'm abundant, I'm abundant." Um...because it's fear that's blocking the feeling to back up that "I am abundant."

Elan: Do you allow yourself to feel the fear or do you deny the fear? Do you believe that you should not be feeling it?

Q: I feel it and I can sweat sometimes when I feel it.

Elan: Oh. Alright.

Q: So, I acknowledge the fear, and I believe that I contain the other belief, and I go to the preferred belief, but I don't know. I'm really stuck.

Elan: Let's assume that somewhere in this process you do decide and do buy into the idea that "well, perhaps I'm not abundant. I'm everything I wish to be, but I'm not abundant." Do you think that's true?

Q: Well, the logic and the evidence doesn't support the idea that I'm abundant.

Elan: But is what I am saying accurate?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Alright. That is then where you insert the vibration and get the effect that seems to support what you are calling "a lack of abundance."

In this case, this fits into our description of trusting your decision. Do not grasp at the decision in desperation, but simply remind yourself, "I am abundant. My abundance is who I am. It is my method to express myself fully. And I will have the universe, which is only a fancy label for myself, support my decision."

Therefore, you will be unwilling to talk yourself out of it using an external set of criteria. Once you are willing to maintain that resolve, truly maintain it, truly place and register that decision, despite any other criteria, external circumstances, bills, and so forth, you will find that external reflection begins to change as well.

If the first time your decision appears to be challenged by your reality and you buckle in, you re-establish your old decision which is toward the thing you say you don't prefer and then say, "See here's the evidence." In other words, you're still making decisions, and you're still seeing through the eyes of those decisions. Therefore, your power is right there, right now. And how exciting!

However, is this practical?

Q: Um. It's just gonna be.

Elan: Alright. How does that feel?

Q: Actually, I felt a little shift there as you were talking. I guess before I wasn't really actually believing that it was in me to be abundant.

Elan: Sometimes, in the way that individuals will say, "I am," they are actually adding in parentheses and saying, "I really wish I was." That is not committed positive decision-making. I do not mean to give the word "affirmation" a bum rap. It is only that it is used in a disempowered way. Not that there is anything negative about affirming, but there is a difference between commitment and wishing.

Is that enabling you to continue the shift?

Q: Again, I think I was just sort of inside of myself by saying that "I am abundant." There was a fear, I think. It was self-worth too.

Elan: Simply remind yourself that you have some say. You do. You have complete say.

Q: There's this stuff that I see.

Elan: If you look around you, you will see that experience tells you can do it across the board and already do.

Pay attention to how you perpetuate the experience. What you are complaining about is still decision making. Be mindful as to where you shift and where you, as you sometimes say, "buckle in." Allow it. If you find that happening, let it be Alright. Then realign. Re-assess. Re-decide. In the moment that you do, you are now the vibration of abundance. If there seems to be an external circumstantial timeline, it will transform very quickly when you simply maintain your resolve. Often you will not notice any time lag.

Remember, literally speaking, it isn't a time lag. Your reality is a neutral set of props that you invest meaning into. You are the one who then uses that as evidence either for or against your decision.

One way to interpret negative circumstances is to decide that "well, that's an old effect." Another way is to decide that you are the new person, and those circumstances are absolutely not a result of the past but are new and support your decision. You are no longer a person who generates those old effects.

Each circumstance is an opportunity to use that neutral symbol and re-label it according to your new decision. It's your interpretation of any symbol that determines your decision, determines your approach, and determines the effect you get out, not the circumstance, not the neutral symbol itself.

What's is need versus want versus excitement?

Q: How would you differentiate between what you need versus what you want versus what excites you in your definition of abundance?

Elan: In a sense, they are interchangeable. However, perhaps, one difference is whether you have what you require in order to continue to do the things that you are doing versus insisting that what you want needs to come right now.

In other words, wanting brings along with it the nuance of timing. You can have whatever you want though not necessarily, particularly at first, when you want it. This is because you have some beliefs about what will be the most likely, or unlikely unfoldment of your timeline. It's not because you can't have it.

But at first, in general, when you integrate your beliefs you do so with some foothold to the old beliefs, and you will only do so within the acceptability of your own beliefs.

To encapsulate, overall, they are interchangeable. When you first begin to take back your power, you sometimes believe that what you want can come when you want it but not always. Sometimes, you will impose upon yourself that you must learn certain things to be able to appreciate the thing that you want even more than you would right now.

Q: So, would it be accurate to say that abundance is the ability to choose that which will support you in continuing to follow your path of excitement?

Elan: That will do.

Q: Thank you.

I asked because I was interested in the specific word “need.” And um...

Elan: And you mean something that you require in order to continue to move forward. Yes.

Q: It was a sense of lack versus having everything which you need with synchronicity being there. The “need” to me sounded a little bit like timing was unfolding rather than the instant that you choose to move in a direction there...Timing is not a prerequisite; it is a requisite if you choose it.

Elan: Your language has many words which have many different meanings. We will continue to say that abundance is the ability to do what you need to do when you need to do it. What individuals perceive and seem to understand the clearest is “that they need to do this.” We understand that there is no overall need to create the need, but if you are going to create, then, you can have the ability to do the things you need to do when you need to do them.

Q: Thanks.

Elan: And you as well.

Is teleportation possible?

Q: Can we develop the ability to transport the physicality from one location to another...uh...

Elan: The ability? Yes. It is, however, not that useful or necessary within our chosen exploration which is still to some degree to experience physicality. You, however, can do it also. It is simply a matter of unblocking the firmly held belief which keeps you from doing so. It is actually far more natural to your state of being to be able to do so. This is because you do not exist within space and time; space and time are a prodigy of you.

Q: Is there a value to being somewhere else and being where you are simultaneously?

Elan: You have to answer that question from your own perspective. From our perspective, there is a value in all creation. Again, recognize that you, right now, exist simultaneously on every level, and you have chosen not to be aware of these other levels in order that you could focus and concentrate on this reality.

You can create the experience of teleportation and make a trip as follows. Get into a meditative state. If you will begin to think that you can unlock the belief that it is impossible to do so, you can teleport. The methodology is quite simple. You close your eyes and picture around and about your physical body a gray mistiness. This will be representational of what we use around and about our spacecraft. This is called an isolation field. Then, picture your destination. That locks in the coordinates.

The actual mechanism for making the actual teleportation is emotion. It is energy motion. You activate it by creating the isolation field and then drawing up within you with every fiber of your being how that place allows you to feel. Visualize it. Pump it with the emotion of how that place allows you to feel. Then you can do it.

It is that simple. And anything which makes it more complicated is your opportunity to look at the beliefs you are imposing upon yourself to not be able to do so.

Do you understand?

Q: Yes.

A different person asks, “How do we teleport?”

Q: How do we achieve teleportation--which to me means I can physically move my body somewhere else on this planet. Let's say, I gotta be in two places. That's okay; I don't mind, but I want to be able to go somewhere, right away, fast, right now, and save all the time, the energy, and the expense, and do it quickly. How can I do that?

Elan: So you wish to accumulate a new type of frequent flyer miles. Generally, in the way that you create your reality (and to use your terminology) you must crawl before you walk and walk before you run.

One logical result of beginning to expand your consciousness will be to physically seeming to dematerialize and rematerialize the physical point of view as well as the body with it. Generally speaking, travel has to be done in a linear way. This has to do with the agreement that you made to be physical, to be finite. It also has to do with having chosen to express that agreement through certain protocols.

As I have discussed in this agreement, you want to experience life in shifts in perspectives and discover rather than escape it. In the way you are presenting to me your wish to teleport, I sense an underlying--shall I say--presence of powerlessness behind the motivation.

Q: I do believe it's possible or else I wouldn't have asked this.

Elan: Understood.

Q: Okay, so, well, how does that indicate powerlessness? I need help.

Elan: Do you feel that you need to break your agreement to get what you want? Do you feel that you cannot fully be yourself without breaking that agreement?

Q: I'm so oriented. How do I do it? I really want to achieve it.

Elan: The best answer that I can give at this moment, and to keep it simple, brief, and relevant, is that now is not the time.

Focus on what excites you from what is available and factor out that option. Choose something else that is available. Then in living your life, that could become available. However, as you live this way, you may find that you no longer wish to do that because there will be other options.

Q: I will ponder what you just said.

Elan: It's one of those "trust me on this one" things.

Q: Have there been people on our planet, human beings, that have accomplished that?

Elan: Absolutely. But since the mass has generally agreed to experience a reality where that is not possible, only once you begin to expand your awareness to allow for more possibilities beyond the mass agreement, would you be able to see an individual do so. In other words, if you believe it is not possible, and completely expressed it as not being possible, you would not see the one doing it, and even if you did, you would not believe it.

Q: Do you, on Essesani, do you do it?

Elan: Yes, but not generally. We are so engaged with the fact that we chose a body and that we chose to experience things in this linear way that we live within our agreement and make that commitment so fully that we literally don't have time to do anything else.

Q: That's why you have spaceships?

Elan: That, and we still choose the physical convention, consciously.

Are there negative spirits?

Q: Elan?

Elan: Yes!

Q: Hello, Elan.

Elan: Greetings!

Q: Um...my spiritual psychotherapy group is going very well.

Elan: Alright.

Q: And um...it's- its' inspired me to do give a public workshop and do some channeling.

Elan: Well, how exciting. I assume that there are several individuals present who will be speaking to you at the break.

Q: Um...I- I have told a number of people that I practice doing this, um, and I was talking with, um, a psychic person, and she was disagreeing about me offering this to the public. From her point of view, people could access some form of negative experiences. This has never been my experience with the people that I've attracted.

Elan: Then trust what you believe and understand that her belief is an expression and statement of where she is at.

Q: Is there really such a thing as negative energies? My belief system doesn't contain that.

Elan: Really, such as what?

Q: Such as attracting negative spirits to me that...

Elan: Well, again, remember you attract the reality that you are the vibration of. If you are vibration of unconditional love, life, and generosity, then that is what you attract. If what you put out is fear, then you can attract a corresponding version of what you don't prefer. This is because fear is an emotional statement that says what you do not prefer is most likely. That is one reason why we suggest clarity when you are exploring these types of ideas.

However, if one feels fear that in and of itself is not negative, it is neutral. If you understand that fear is a statement that says, "I believe something I don't prefer is most likely," then you can use that fear. Remember, you cannot get rid of the fear. You are the totality. You are the reality. There is no outside. There is no place to get rid of anything to.

Use the fear by asking yourself, "Alright, I feel this fear. Let me feel it and make sure it's really fear. Yep! It's fear. Alright. What must I believe right here right now? Where I am sitting? What is happening to be feeling this fear? Well, perhaps I can believe that something can come in and get me. Alright, yes, I do believe that." Now you have the belief. Only when you first own the belief can you change that belief. If you are willing to remind yourself that nothing can slip in there without your permission, you can setup the vibration of the new belief.

Do you understand?

Q: Yes.

Elan: Therefore, if you have a negative intention you can attract a corresponding negative vibration, for again, this is a universe of polarity. But if you have a positive, unconditional, loving intention, negativity cannot find that. Negativity cannot see that. They do not, perhaps you can say, experientially exist within the same reality. Therefore, prior to implementing the process, use what you feel to nail down what you believe. If that belief is subtle and useful, by all means keep it. If you do not, you can then look at the actions that would correspond to the new preferred belief.

Is that of assistance?

Q: Yes, so I question this a little bit. I guess I don't believe in negative entities. I...

Elan: Well, they believe in you.

[laughter]

Q: Who believes in me?

Elan: Remember, you can grant validity to them, but have them simply be irrelevant to you. In other words, negative energy does exist; it is an option. When you deny its existence, you place attention on it. If you acknowledge that it all exists, you will only attract what is relevant to you. This makes the negative perspective irrelevant. It's not that it doesn't exist, it is simply irrelevant to who you are as long as you validate it.

In this case, perhaps you believe that if you allow other beliefs, ones you do not prefer to even to exist, that they could overwhelm you. However, they cannot. Allow them. But allow them to be irrelevant to who you are. In other words, validate it and send it on its merry way.

Q: If I have a belief that I'm not in touch with consciously...

Elan: Well, you are in touch with it. That's why we are having this discussion.

Q: Then how can I be channeling for all these years, eleven to twelve years, and I have only had positive experiences with the channeling?

Elan: Perhaps you do not understand what I am saying. You have a positive perspective; therefore, you can only experience a positive experience. You can only enter into a channeling arrangement that corresponds to your own orientation and vibration. Since you are unconditionally loving, you can only bring forth a positive energy.

That is why you have gotten the results you have gotten. It is not that the negative does not exist; it is simply irrelevant to you and, therefore, does not exist within your experience.

Is that clearer?

Q: Thank you.

Elan: We are simply maintaining our assertion to you that all truths are true. The ultimate truth is that all truths are true. And the good news is you get to pick the ones you want but not by invalidating the ones you don't, by judging the ones you don't. That puts more tension upon the ones you don't. Acknowledge everything, and simply choose what you wish because it is who you choose to be. That is what gives you the simplest and easiest access to the things you desire. By invalidating what you don't desire, you paradoxically hold that in place.

Is that clear?

Q: Yes

Elan: Is there something else that is coming up?

Q: Yeah, well, it's as if you're reading my mind. [laughter] Um...

Elan: Not really. I don't read, but I understand what you mean.

Q: Um...I'm thinking of those people I've heard who've said that as they've tried to channel or even had these experiences that were upsetting to them or negative, I was just taking it to mean that it was a part of their own unconscious.

Elan: Well, in a sense. But understand that they had the fear. They made the statement, at least to themselves, that they truly believed that it was perhaps more likely that a negative entity would interact with them. And what they experienced may have actually been a subconscious portion of themselves or may have been a reflection of an attraction of a negative energy. In any case, it was only allowed by them due to their lack of knowledge of what we are discussing.

Q: What is a negative energy or entity?

Elan: Well, perhaps just in general terms, positive would be defined as those things that are integrative and which bring things back together. Integration is the expression that all things are one thing. Negative would be something which is separative and exclusionary.

Q: Are you talking about things like disembodied spirits or energy?

Elan: No, not necessarily. In the example you gave, it would loosely correspond to the subconscious of the individual being attracted or called forth from the fear itself.

Q: I think I understand it.

Elan: Alright. If not, we will speak again.

What is the universe?

Q: If each of us is “all that is” to ourselves and everything already exists, when we create our reality we take from the infinite potential reality and probable futures. And we create our experience by our assignment of meanings and definitions. You often say that as we're doing this the universe hears us and supports our desires.

Elan: Yes, most, shall we say, directly by your actions.

Q: Yes, I know.

Elan: Again, the interpretation and the assumptions and attitudes are what lay down the groundwork for the actions. So they are directly involved, but again the actions literally speak louder than words or thoughts to the universe.

Q: My question is “who is the universe?” Is the universe “all that is?”

Elan: “All that is.”

Q: And our version of “all that is”?

Elan: And your version of “all that is.” At the same time, “all that is” is each and every manifestation within the totality of “all that is.” It is also self-aware. You understand that you are an expression of “all that is.” Therefore, most obviously, you exhibit self-awareness and so must “all that is.” The difference is that it does not limit itself to being self-aware only. It is also expansively aware, infinitely aware.

Q: Okay. Thank you.

Why isn't my life going the way I want?

Q: My life is not going the way I want, and I'm trying to understand why. Can you help me clarify this?

Elan: Do you feel you deserve to live the life that you prefer?

Q: That's coming up lately.

Elan: Alright. Do you feel that you deserve it?

Q: I can say the preferred me says yes...

Elan: Alright. Stop. Would perhaps the most accurate answer be "yes and no"?

Q: [shakes head no]

Elan: Why no?

Q: Because what I'm experiencing right now in my life is that what I desire, my preferred reality, is not my current reality.

Elan: And does that mean that because you are experiencing something that you do not desire that you do not deserve to experience what you do desire?

Q: I see the logic.

Elan: Where is the logic, I am simply asking?

Q: I guess it's still in my belief structure, and it's surprising me.

Elan: Oh. Well, do understand, as we have said all along, that you contain it all. Not everything except this. If you wish to get technical (and we don't want to overwhelm you but only hand you back your power on a plate), you have two beliefs. One, that you do deserve everything you desire and two, that you don't deserve anything you desire. Now what are you going to do?

Q: I'll eat off the plate that I...

Elan: You choose which one you prefer to express. Both are equally true and therefore both have equal accessibility to express them. And both will get a 100% result. If you choose to express that you do not deserve the joy and ecstasy that you do wish to create, you will create a life of dangling it in front of you and never quite getting it.

If you decide consciously that no matter what the face of your life is, or even because of the face of your life that you do deserve, that is what will enable it to change. This will not occur if you buckle based upon the evidence. That is very literally what you have described to me that you are doing. "Well, I decide to change, but these things come along, and they are more powerful than my decision. In fact, they tell me my decision isn't sticking. How can my decision possibly stick if this is happening?"

But, ultimately, the paradox and the irony is that it always boils down to you finally saying, "And so, therefore, my decision did not stick." And the moment you do that your reality realigns to the decision not sticking and very literally seems to support very strongly that it has not.

You go back and forth. "I deserve. I do not. I deserve. I do not. I can have what I want. I can't. I can have what I want. I can't." This creates an intermittent result. "Preferential thing. Non-preferential thing. Preferential thing. Non-preferential thing."

You're still getting the results of your decision. In many ways, it is a matter of being willing to completely commit to your decision.

Perhaps, at first, it may appear that you need to create the endurance to persist. If you are persistent in expressing that decision consciously, as we have said before, generally you'll see a demonstrative statement within just three days. It will be an immediate and sweeping change.

However, this will not happen if it is three days of "let's test this out." It won't happen if it's three days of "by the end of these three days I'm gonna do an assessment, and it can go either way." That literally sabotages the method. This is not external sabotage going on. This is simply you not committing to who you are.

I understand that it can seem as though your decision is delusion, especially if you are testing it rather than committing to it. It may seem as if you are only fooling yourself. However, that's only if you set this up as a test. When you set it up as a test, it has the underlying supposition that you probably can and will fail. Setting it up as a statement, setting it up as an act of creation is far more definite and allows that evidence to change.

I know that we've discussed this before with you specifically. I know that we've discussed this in many different forms, and I also know perhaps you may still be doing some of that "well, I've heard this before." But everything that I have just said you have not heard before. It is brand new. Your implementation of it because it is brand new can only give a brand-new result.

What is fear?

Q: What is fear?

Elan: Fear is when you believe a reality that you don't prefer is most likely. As a result, you attract a version of what you don't prefer.

With that definition of fear, when you are afraid you can ask yourself, "Why would I believe in this reality that I do not prefer? Why would I believe that any reality I do not prefer is most imminent?"

It may be that you do not believe that you create your own reality. Even if you believe that, in order to change your belief to that you do, you must first own the belief that you do not. You cannot change what you do not own.

When you own it, "Alright. Alright. Alright. I do not believe I create my own reality 100%." You are now back in the driver's seat. You are now back in the position to be able to change it, but again by denying what you already believe, you will never change it.

So, embrace your fear. Understand that all things are neutral props. This applies to emotions. In your society when you usually feel fear it is ingrained within you to immediately say, "Oh! That is very bad." But you do not have to have that interpretation.

Instead you can say, "Here is a neutral emotion that I have formerly labeled negative. When I have labeled it negative, I have never gotten anything but a negative effect. I will be a bit more creative this time and label it positive." You will begin to find how it serves you.

When you allow any symbol to serve the purpose it was created for, it transforms. You cannot get rid of fear. There is nowhere to get rid of anything to. You are the entire universe. Where will you put it? But you can transform it by allowing some aspect of it to serve you, not focusing in on what is most obviously negative. Instead be a bit more creative and now look at what must be positive. And every single time you will do this, you will find something positive. And it will be something that does serve you that will allow you to not get rid of your fear but use it, embrace it, and allow it to transform to ecstasy.

How do I let go of fears?

Q: I am working on a group project, and one person in the group decided to do his own thing and really hurt the project. I was really angry at him and afraid the project would fail. How do I let go of those fears...or be in the now?

Elan: One of the mechanisms with which you can act on releasing judgment, self-judgment, judgment toward others, which is a form of self-judgement, is what you call forgiveness. As your literature says it is divine in the aspect that it takes into consideration that the reality exists within you that everything is a valid exploration and that all truths are true. It always gets back to these concepts. They can always be used in this way.

Q: Thank for the explanation.

Elan: Thank you. Now use them if you wish. I do not insist that you have too much fun or have too much of an ecstatic life, it is up to you.

[much laughter]

But share them, be responsible to him and not for him. And then you will be an example of that mechanism as well. He will make his choices and you can interact and assist to whatever degree you are able. But you cannot make his choices for him. Trust that he was not able to make the choices of the others in aforementioned circumstance. So show him an example of that in your own interaction with him, if you wish.

Do we have guiding forces?

Q: I wanted to ask you. Do we have guiding forces working with us in our lives? Like guides and angels?

Elan: Everyone has associate souls. These are energies that have chosen to remain non-physical and that you can talk to. But remember, you create your own reality, and they will not interfere in your reality.

The way they will most often communicate with you is through a loving nudge here and there. This will help you redirect your attention to what you are exploring in this lifetime or searching for.

If you want to have a direct conversation with them, simply close your eyes, breathe, relax, allow yourself to center, and then speak. Have a conversation. However, remember, a conversation is a two-way street. If you are speaking to your guide be sure to allow the dialogue to be two-way. Leave a space to listen.

Meditation can be a way to listen. And the key being that when you get something, when you receive an idea, validate it. If you say, "Oh that's just some thought of mine," then you shut down the communication.

In the end, it is all you, for you are the conduit, you are the middleman. It is you, but in general it is not just "little old me." If you will validate and accept what you get, you can have that type of dialogue.

If you would like a more physical experience you can interact with them in your dreams. Simply when falling asleep make a request that you would like to interact, and you can invite or invoke that guide to walk in the same space as you in that way.

However, when you do this, you may not allow yourself to bring back the memories. So, when you invite them, also affirm that you will bring back a symbolic memory of that interaction.

Often the memories that you bring back will be only a vague shadow of what actually occurred. This is because your memories are framed relative to your physical existence. When things occur in the non-physical state, in the quasi-planar state in between physical and non-physical, there may not be the appropriate symbols to bring it back as.

Often, when people say, "I did not dream last night," that is what is occurring. They are simply not having the symbol to bring it back. But you always create the dream reality when you are "sleeping." It's automatic and simple. You dream all the time, but you do not allow yourself to bring back the memory or a symbol to represent the memory.

For instance, our planet is a bit more alien than you might imagine. Things are so different that you would have no frame of reference. So, if when you were dreaming you were to visit our planet, you would bring back some symbol in your reality of it that may not actually in any way represent the actual experience. But that is the closest you can come in bringing it back.

So, the very long answer to your question is yes.

What is autism?

Q: Elan.

Elan: Eh!

Q: Can you tell me about the condition of autism?

Elan: That term means many different things to many different people. Generally, autistic individuals have chosen to be highly specialized and highly focused in physical reality.

Often, from your perspective, or from the perspective that someone viewing the situation, it seems as though that focus or specialization is at the cost of the rest of social custom.

It is not so much that these individuals are not genius, they are. They are just specialized and focused. The challenge is to find how they express that focus. When you do, you will see them suddenly wake up and shine in that area and generally only that area. Because it is at the cost of the rest of the “agreed upon perception of reality,” these individuals can very strongly commit to being very genius and focused in one area. That is the reason.

Q: So, what area is my five-year-old specialized in?

Elan: That is up to you to decide. And you will find if you are willing to see the types of things that he gravitates towards and then provide them consciously you will begin to see how he can shine. Rather than assuming that something is wrong. Assume that it would behoove yourself to find the thing that is right for him. It will be patently, as you say, obvious. When you present him with something that is in any way representative of his chosen focus, he will light up. He will react in ways you have not seen him react.

He will act with a knowingness and a preconceived knowledge that will surprise and shock you.

Have you sampled different ideas, or is this all quite new?

Q: No. I think maybe new. I haven't really...

Elan: Oh. Have you played what you call "ball" with your son?

Q: Explain.

Elan: Rolling a ball.

Q: Um...that's his favorite thing right now!

Elan: Alright. Play with that. You may find that he will begin to do things with the ball that are quite amazing. It's a place to start. Alright?

Q: Thank you

Elan: Thank you. I've done nothing.

Why do violent things occur to children?

Q: Why do violent things occur to children? I can understand violence among adults but how can it occur among children when there's an innocence to begin with?

Elan: Understood. Remember, you are multidimensional, infinite, and eternal. What you call "life" is one of an infinite number of lives that you have lived. When you look at things from a linear perspective there is apparency of innocence, freshness, and newness. When you look at things from the perspective of your higher self or soul, there is a pre-existing consciousness that is part of the incarnation.

What you call karma, by the way, an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, is self-imposed. The idea of balance is automatic. When you put out something, you get something back immediately. You always get the reality you are the vibration of. The idea that balance happens through tit-for-tat terms is a societal and individual choice. When people buy into the idea of karma, they will use that as an explanation for what you are describing.

Also, when a person is an infant or a child, they are very receptive and very able to mimic the vibrations of those around them. In this way, they co-create with their parents.

However, in any moment, you can realize who you are consciously and make conscious choices. In this way, less comes from "karma" and what you call "past tendencies."

Does that answer the question?

Q: Yes. It does. With children then, you're coming from a premise that we are being incarnated from another form?

Elan: Well, the idea is that you live many lives in many different realities. But, you live a series of many, many, many consecutive lives upon your planet as well. What you are calling an innocent child was, in the not too distant past, a fully formed grown-up and then died. Or you can say reincarnated. That is not my exact understanding of the mechanism, but I understand in linear terms re-incarnated will do as an explanation.

Q: That helps. Thank you.

Elan: Now, that is in no way to rationalize such behavior. The perpetrator in a victim-perpetrator situation still has full responsibility for their action and will create full results which generally seem to manifest themselves in what you call consequences for these types of actions.

The other people, the children for example, who may play victims, can choose to use that victimhood in whatever way they wish. They can use it as an excuse to continue to perpetrate other things on other people in their future. Or they can use it as a strong unwillingness to tolerate that type of perpetrator-hood and refuse to be or to allow others to be victims. There are many opportunities that come from the types of experiences which can result from that, both positive and negative.

You will find many of your most motivated grown-ups who are involved in great change upon your planet have done so using those very victim situations as their motivation. That's an example of how such a thing that would seem on the surface to have absolutely no positive value would actually have a great value for many, many, many individuals. Does that help?

Q: Yes. Thank you.

Elan: Thank you.

Q: On that same theme. I have a very dear friend who had a really tragic situation happen to one of her children. I have talked to her many times and find that oftentimes when I'm speaking about these things that you have discussed with us to her, I get a flash of this situation, and somehow I can't make the connection directly to it cause it's so tragic and...

Elan: Understood.

Q: Well, it has to do with her husband. Without realizing it, in his truck, he backed over her son, their son, when he was three, and killed him. And so are you saying that the child incarnated knowing perhaps that this sort of thing....

Elan: In that type of instance, it can be the situation where the individual is in that sense conscious. There are instances where they would not be and instances where they would, but at this point all that can be had from the situation is using it as either a negative reflection or positive reflection.

Q: Do you mean it's giving the parents an opportunity to exercise forgiveness and that sort of thing? Is that what you're saying?

Elan: Perhaps, as you say, it is a very big ball of wax, but yes. That does allow them to look at many issues such as unconditional love, self-love, forgiveness, judgment...

Q: Do you think our children know in realizing this that they are gifts and that they don't really belong to us, they're...

Elan: Also realize that the individual, the child, does not cease to exist. He is simply not in physical form any longer. That understanding can be very helpful to in maintaining a more balanced perspective and understanding. You are all infinite beings as well.

Q: So, it's just challenging for the parents to understand something like that.

Elan: I would imagine that it would be. And this is an example of something which I would have no personal experience with.

Conclusion: Use Your Actions

When we speak to your society, we often say that you are the creators of your reality. When we explain this, we also explain that you can only experience the reality that you are the vibration of. At the same time, people often get confused as to what exactly this means. That is a fair question.

Ultimately, you are a consciousness. In your pristine state, in your natural state, energetically speaking, you are a frequency. You are a vibration within the overall primary frequency that you call God, or we call “all that is.” Each person is a distinct vibration, and those differences define who you are.

This is all well and good and sounds nice, but it is also quite practical. Even though you are a consciousness, you are in a physical reality and have ideas that are unique to it.

Actions Speak Louder Than Words

One of these ideas is what you call “time” and a “timeline” and having things unfold along that timeline. Since this is physicality, action is the ultimate expression in this life of your vibration. Physical action is the statement of who you are in any given moment. Physical action is the ultimate evidence of a belief that you hold.

When you talk about creating your reality, reality is created by the beliefs you act upon. You act as though you believe something. You act as a person who believes a particular belief and it is those actions that midwife the belief into reality.

Whatever you do in any given moment or a succession of moments determines which belief you are expressing. When you change your actions, you change a component of your vibration.

One component of your vibration is constant. This is what you can call your signature vibration. That is the aspect of you that allows you to know no matter how much you change physically, and no matter how much the physical world seems to change around you, that you are still the same you.

Your Signature Vibration

That sense of being who you are is the core of your vibration, your signature vibration. The surrounding component of your vibration is changing and is expressed according to the actions of your life.

Your Reality Matches Your Actions

When I say you can only experience the reality that you are the vibration of, one other way to interpret this is that you can only experience the reality that you act as if it is most likely.

You are not a slave to your beliefs until you act upon those beliefs. Until then, nothing happens and they simply stay in the mental plane.

Thoughts Don't Create Reality Directly

The good news is that you can explore any mental idea, any belief that you wish, think anything you wish without performing the actions and not have a physical effect or an experience from it. You can therefore very safely explore your beliefs. Look at the things that you believe and, again, as long as you do not act upon them, you will not create them. You can simply evaluate them, view them, and see if they are still the beliefs that you wish to hold in your life.

The vibration that you are creates the reality that you experience. It takes one to know one. You must be one in order to know or see something.

You Have Intentionally Forgotten Everything

Very often you will assume that you learn things that you did not know. Now, from one perspective, this may seem accurate, but from the perspective of your infinite self, everything already exists within you. From that perspective, you simply remember things you already knew and have chosen to place an amnesia on yourself to explore from a different angle and experience as if anew. But you already contain everything in your pristine, in your natural, what you sometimes call in your soul state.

When you feel that you learn something, when you feel that something rings true with who you are, when something is stated and it really means something to you, or when someone says something that brings you great joy, you must already contain that on some level in order to know it. You must already be that idea.

When you hear information from any source, whether us or someplace else, and you find that it is helpful or it makes you happy, you don't need to compliment it. While that source may be the trigger it gave you nothing.

We literally teach nothing to you. We simply allow you to trigger, to remember what you already know. The point here is that you can also pat yourself on the back, for you understood it; it made sense to you, meaning that you contained it and are now remembering what you already know.

From the perspective of your eternal self, you never truly learn anything new, you simply remember and reincorporate ideas that you have chosen to forget.

It may seem like you are an empty slate that is filled as your life goes on, but this is only the viewpoint of your physical self.

You intentionally impose a forgetfulness on yourself so that you actually can learn or seem to learn, so that you can actually discover something as if anew, and so that you can actually experience the joy of surprise and not knowing what is coming next.

When you are all-knowing, and when you are expressing your all-knowingness, these things do not exist. You cannot discover anything. You know it all. You cannot learn anything. You know it all. And you cannot be surprised, for it is all evident and nothing can creep up and surprise you.

One of the reasons that you create a physical reality is to explore the joy of discovery itself. You literally forget everything in order to enjoy the process of remembering it and experiencing it as being fresh, as being new, as being fascinating, as again being unexpected.

This is part of the joy of the choice that you have all made to forget 99.999% of who you are. If you begin to look at it this way, and begin to get down to the business of being curious and fascinated by your reality, you will begin to truly glean why you have chosen to be here.

Own All of Your Reality

When you say, "I was put here," or, "I am stuck here," you are simply beating yourself up and not acknowledging that it is your hand doing it. And when you do not acknowledge it, you remove your ability to change your creation. If something is happening to you, where is the power? The power is in the external reality. The reality controls you.

If you understand that it is happening from you, in the way that we are sharing, it hands you back the power and you can then change it if you don't like the way it is.

Your Actions Reflect Your Beliefs

Your actions always express your truest beliefs. As a personality, you are a prism. You are a spark of the white light of infinite creation, and you break down and filter your reality through the three-sided prism of beliefs, emotions, and thoughts. This is your unique perspective and what makes you a distinct individual. And you can use this idea to shape your vibration. Ultimately, it is your actions that create physically the manifestation of that vibration.

Emotions and thoughts are always a result of a belief, and you can use your emotions and you can use your thoughts to trace back what you must believe unconsciously. Then you can acknowledge those beliefs and make them conscious. Acknowledging them and allowing them to be conscious allows you to choose new beliefs.

You cannot choose new beliefs if you deny the old ones. Acknowledging a belief equalizes the weight of it with all other beliefs.

Use Your Actions to Find Your Beliefs

While you can trace back a belief from your emotions and thoughts, you can also trace back your beliefs from your actions. Your actions can be an obvious window to your beliefs. You always act as if you believe something. You do not act in a vacuum. You always act with a foundational, fundamental belief, emotions, and thoughts.

You can also use your actions as a reflection of the state of your vibration. You can use your actions as a reflection of the state of some of the beliefs that you are holding that perhaps you no longer choose to hold.

Acknowledge Your Negative Emotions

We often suggest that you allow yourself to feel your negative and limiting emotions rather than squelching or denying them. Allow yourself to feel them, and ask yourself, “What a person must believe who would feel this?” Use those emotions to trace the belief itself, nail it down, and then decide whether you wish to change it or not.

You can also do so quite effectively by utilizing your actions. You will find that you always create what you believe and that is only because you act that way. When you begin to see what actions you are performing, perhaps actions that result from a limiting or negative belief, you will get an idea that will allow you to take back your power and change that belief.

Be the Preferred You

The only reason you get the effect of a belief is you act that way according to it. You can use your imagination as a tool. Once you have acknowledged an old unpreferred and limiting belief, you can choose the new preferred beliefs and hand them over to your imagination. Allow your imagination to create an image of a person who already has that belief and to show you how that person would act, react, or what they would do in any given situation.

Once you create this “preferred you” model in your imagination, you can hand any situation over to it, and it will show you what a person who believes this thing that you say you prefer to believe would do in that given situation.

If you find that you have an old belief, and an old set of actions, you can acknowledge that, and then you call forth the new belief and allow your imagination to provide a new set of actions. The actions of the new preferred belief will be most obvious and blatantly different from the actions of the old nonpreferred belief. You will have right in front of you two different options that obviously will have to have two completely different results.

Therefore, you can begin to look at your beliefs. Before acting upon perhaps the more limiting beliefs, you can create through your imagination that preferred you, as a reference, and allow yourself to hand over the situation to that preferred you, to see what they do, and to come up with an alternate set of actions.

Change Is Simple

Once you see that these alternate actions are an option, it is very simple to choose them and do them instead of the old ones.

It is not difficult to change your beliefs and their effects. When you have another, more positive, choice, that choice is so much more attractive and representative of who you prefer to be and what you want to create that you can head off your old beliefs.

I remind you that you already create your reality this way. You simply do it automatically and with no thought. You always act according to what you believe. We are not asking you to do anything difficult or anything that you need to practice at. We simply are speaking about being more conscious about deciding what you want to believe and deciding what you want to create.

Allow All Your Beliefs

Let all the beliefs that you have bought into unconsciously come up. They may come up through your emotions or through your actions. Watch what you do when you do something you do not prefer. Rather than judging yourself for doing it, ask yourself, "What must I believe to be doing this? What must any person believe in this situation to be doing this?"

A belief will be forthcoming. A belief will be presented to you from your subconscious. It will be completely obvious; "Well, obviously, anyone who is doing this must believe this." That belief is now in your control to change for you have acknowledged it.

I remind you that acknowledgement gives you back the power of choice. Denial takes the belief that you do not prefer and adds more weight, making it more likely that you will act upon it, for you are in denial of it rather than acknowledgement.

You Cannot Get Rid of Beliefs

All these beliefs exist within you. You do not contain a belief and not contain its opposite. Your ability to even imagine anything shows you that you contain that as well. And again I remind you that since you are infinite and contain everything, there is no outside. There is nowhere to put something. You cannot get rid of a belief you do not prefer.

However, you can redefine your relationship to a belief that you do not prefer. You can make a belief that you do not prefer irrelevant by not acting on it. That belief will still exist within you but is simply not expressed.

Watch Yourself

Therefore, all we are suggesting is to begin to watch what you do. When you act in a way you prefer you will see that it is because of positive non-limiting beliefs. When you see yourself doing things that you do not prefer, and do not judge yourself, you will see other beliefs that you are expressing, and then you can acknowledge them and change them.

We hope this is clear and that you can see the value in this physical world of your action faith. Your actions are your ultimate expression in a physical reality. It is the ultimate manifestation of what you believe. You can always tell what someone believes by simply watching what they do in any given situation. It is always blatantly obvious that the actions as well as the emotions and thoughts are directly a mirror, are directly a window to what a person believes.

It is simple to transform your life to the way you want. Be mindful and perpetuate behavior that you prefer and use the behavior that you don't prefer.

Be Kind to Yourself

One of the reasons why this may appear difficult is that you judge yourself, and then lock yourself up, and then you do not use the actions that you do not prefer. When you judge those actions, "Well I shouldn't have done that. Dumb me," you do not put yourself in the conducive mental state to glean positivity and glean meaning from it. You are far too busy beating yourself up.

If you find yourself judging unpreferred actions, so what? When you judge yourself for judging yourself you then compound the judgment and the judgment becomes overwhelming. All you have to do is simply acknowledge, "Alright, I have judged myself but now I will go a step further and use these actions. What must I believe to have done this? Well, perhaps I believe I was helpless in this particular way. Alright, if I felt I was helpless, a helpless person would act like this. Now, how would a powerful person act in this same exact situation?"

Plug that into your imagination. Look at how the preferred you in your imagination acts in the same situation. Look at how they hold themselves. Look at how their composure remains. Look at how they deal with other individuals. You can use this method in a very simple way to replace the unpreferred actions. But it doesn't work when you are in the process of beating yourself up and knocking yourself down through judgment.

Judgment slows down the process. Judgment creates more separation within you and does not reflect acknowledgement and willingness to change the things that you no longer prefer. It is within your power to change anything in your life that you no longer prefer.

You Don't Have to Harm Others

Remember that you have so much power as a creator that you can create anything at all, and I mean anything that you wish, without harming yourself or someone else. Sometimes, your trust in the timing comes into play when exercising this power. That is truly the extent of your great power.

When you get what you want at the cost of someone else, you are actually being less powerful. Technically it's easier and requires less power to hurt someone else, but you have so much overwhelming power that you actually have the capacity of creating the life you prefer without harming yourself or anyone else. This is the true degree of the power that you all possess to create your own reality.

Our Vibrations Are Becoming More Similar

Thank you for interacting with me in this way. Within my society, this is simply all automatic. The more you become like an integrated society, which is how we choose to express ourselves, the more our vibrations are similar. They have become similar enough that we can perceive each other.

The vibration that you are also determines what you perceive, what you attract, and what you can interact with. The universe is an infinite statement with many overlapping realities, literally within the same space at the same time, only separated by differences in frequency. As your actions shift, your vibration shifts. Not only do you change the effect of what occurs in your life, but you change the effects of what you perceive, and you change the effects of which realities are more alike your own, and therefore which realities you can now attract.

If twenty to fifty years ago you explored the surrounding galaxies through space travel, you would have found very little, because your vibration as a society was so different you simply would not have perceived other societies literally physically.

But as your vibration as a society and individually shifts, your perception shifts, and you are now as a society beginning to see more identification with what you would call extraterrestrial sources. Like a pendulum once in a while you swing into the vibration of certain other civilizations, and certain other realities.

The Vibrations Are Still Different

This is one of the reasons that when members of your society have had some interactions with extraterrestrial societies, they seem a bit dreamlike, unreal, and hard to believe. They are out of phase with your reality. The vibrations are somewhat dissimilar. They are similar enough to perceive each other, but still dissimilar enough that there is still a slight incongruency.

As you begin to act and live according to preference, desire, and unconditional love, you will find the many expressions within the multiverse will begin to be attracted unto you of same vibration. One of them is my society and my civilization, but we are not by any means the only.

This is Why We Can Communicate Now

One of the things that I am truly thanking you for is that as a society and individually you have become enough like our vibration for us to be able to communicate at least a little bit. There is still quite a bit of difference, but it is close enough that we can communicate.

In general, our conversations will be more mental. In a case such as this book, it is mentally removed once or maybe twice. We utilize the channels and the editor's vocabulary because we do not speak your language. We are able to do this because you are of like us enough vibrationally to be able communicate through this particular medium, so to speak (pun intended). This allows for an interaction and exchange.

We Are All Part of "All That Is"

We thank you for being willing individually and societally to begin to embody ideas of integration, of unconditional love, of understanding that we are all one expression, many different facets, many different explorations within the one expression and one event of God or what we call "all that is."

Pretty much any of the societies that you will interact with have their own notion of what you call God, but it is not a separated notion. It is not something out there. It is something within. You are all literally viewpoints, or eyes, if you will, of “all that is,” or God itself. Each person is a distinct viewpoint within “all that is.”

You Are Still in Denial

We unconditionally love and appreciate you for your willingness to begin to co-create a third reality that we both can step out upon and that we can both exist within. As your particular orientation comes closer to ours, the possibility for face-to-face interaction becomes more possible. Right now, there are still many things that you deny and refuse to look at within yourself where you feel they can destroy you.

Nothing can destroy you. The only thing that can seem to is an idea or belief that you then express through action, rather than simply thinking it. We do not play that particular game within our reality. We no longer in any way deny anything.

Why We Can't Meet Physically Right Now

Were we to come physically into your proximity, our vibration, our bioenergetic field, what you would perhaps call our aura, will express itself as a complete whole and a non-broken energy field.

When you deny aspects of who you are, colloquially speaking as an analogy, you create gaps within your own energy field. If you were to place our fields in proximity, ours would tend to elevate yours up a few notches. The things that you deny and have refused to look at would come rushing all at once to the surface. This would be in general a bit uncomfortable for you. This is one of the reasons very often why when people interact with us and other extraterrestrial societies physically or perhaps even in a telepathic way, they have an intense fear for no apparent reason.

The fear is not in general of the situation or of us. The fear is all these things that you deny, flooding to the surface all at once from being in physical proximity to an accelerated bioenergetic field.

This is one of the physical reasons that we have not to this point interacted face-to-face with your reality. This has changed quite a bit over since the 1980s. Quite a bit.

You would have less of this reaction, if you wish to call it that, if we were to meet face to face now than we would have even just a few years ago, but there would still be some effect.

You Are Denying Things Less and Less

In the media, you are seeing many of the social things that you have denied. Many are negative. Many of them surround what you call physical, mental, and so on, abuse. These are things which have remained hidden and are now flooding to the surface in many blatant ways.

This is a direct sign that your mental mass consciousness is a reflection of your individual consciousness. Also, it is a sign that your society is now ready to begin to look at many of the things that you have heretofore denied.

Conclusion

The day when we can meet face-to-face draws closer and nearer. It is not necessary that we do so, but it is more and more likely all the time. You will see the signs of it not only in yourself, not only in the acceleration of your own explorations, but societally speaking as well. I simply ask you how I may be of service to you, and we may be of service mutually to each other.
